HARVARD MAN IS DROWNED FROM RACING SHELL IN CHARLES

Sherman Pratt Parsons, Freshman From Detroit, Ventures Out Alone, Is Overturned and Drowns Before Aid Can Arrive

Tragedy Occurs Within Sight of Fellow Students on Way to Athletic Games; Fatality Near the Big Elevated Power Plant

SHERMAN PRATT PARSONS of Detroit, special student in the freshman class at Harvard, was drowned while rowing in the Charles River, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, in full view of hundreds of other collegians and their guests who were hastening to the athletic games in the Stadium and on Soldiers' Field.

Parsons, a practiced sculler, started to turn around in his frail rowing shell in a bend of the treacherous river just below the Weld Boat Club and opposite the big power plant of the Boston Elevated.

Just as he was pulling on his starboard oar and backing water on the port side a stiff gust of wind swept across the water, ruffling the surface of the stream into whitecaps. The gust hit the shell amidships and capsized it instantly.

Sank Without a Struggle.

Parsons was thrown into the water. He sank without an apparent struggle, while women and girl spectators screamed shrilly and their student escorts shouted in alarm and hurried toward the Weld Boat Club float. It is believed that he was seized with a cramp.

Patrick Manning, a boat club attendant who has a record of saving nine lives, saw the accident and started from the Weld Boat Club float in a rowboat without losing a second. When he had covered the 150 feet to the place where Parsons went down, only the floating shell, with its oars still resting in the runners, remained to tell the story.

The police recovered the body four hours later and brought it to shore just as the crowds, which were on their way to the college games when the accident occurred, were emerging from the Stadium and the baseball field.

The feminine portion of the throng shuddered and hurried by the scene with averted faces. The tragedy cast a gloom over the usual gaiety of the baseball and track games.

A particularly pathetic feature of Parsons's death was the receipt of a letter at his room in Matthews Hall, yesterday afternoon, notifying him that he had "made" the Pi Eta Society, for which he was a candidate.

President Lowell on Scene.

President Lowell of Harvard hurried to the river as soon as he heard the sad news. For an hour and a half he stood in deep distress, pacing up and down the bank and shading his eyes with his hand to peer at the water and see if he could possibly glimpse the body. President Lowell was greatly affected by the tragedy among his undergraduates.

Sherman Pratt Parsons was twenty years old. He is the son of H. H. Parsons of Warren avenue, East Detroit. Mr. Parsons is a real estate dealer and cement manufacturer in prosperous circumstances.

Young Parsons entered Harvard last Fall. He "drew" a choice of a room in the Harvard "Yard," a location coveted by students. He took No. 2 in Matthews hall, with Eben L. Norton of Norwood as roommate. Parsons was taking a special course which would graduate him in three years. Norwood is a sophomore.

It's All Right! Get Out the Straw Lid!

Harvard Formally Blasts Open the Regular Season for Panamas and Hectic Hat Bands.

If you haven't bought a new one, maybe Friend Wife can clean the 1910 vintage and make it look near 1911. Friend Wife can't refuse this little service on your hat, because she expects to set you back $14.50 for a lid on her own account about now.

Harvard straws appeared at the Harvard-Brown baseball game and the Harvard-Yale freshman track meet yesterday. They (the straws) were gay with bright bands which would have made Solomon blink. Some colors represented rival "frats." Other hues represented the hectic taste of the wearers.

Previously the maiden straws of the Harvard season have been smashed just out of devilry. This year the Student Council set Saturday, the Thirteenth, for Straw Hat Day. So all the students, or nearly all, donned straws in ensemble and there was no smashing.

WARNS AGAINST AIR GRAB.

Twentieth Century Club Speaker Urges Public to Act.

Speaking before the Twentieth Century Club, William D. Parkinson of Waltham, a well-known educator, said he was convinced "that land tenure should be limited to the surface, that the public should take possession of the air and the solid earth and that individual enterprise when it invades these realms should do so under restrictions laid down by the public and of such a nature as to conserve public interests and to limit congestion." Mr. Parkinson's theme was "The Third Dimension of Land Tenure." He was preceded by Jonas M. Miles of Concord, who spoke on the "Single Tax." Erasmus Wilson of Pittsburg paid a glowing tribute to Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who was a member of the club.

PEACE TREATY SIMPLE.

Anglo-American Arbitration Pact Cut Down to Few Words.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The first draft of the proposed arbitration treaty between America and Great Britain is practically complete. State Department officials have succeeded in crystallizing the main ideas of the projectors of the pact. The principal difficulty was in the consideration of matters excepted from the scheme for general arbitration, but it was found that the desired object could be attained satisfactorily by the exchange of notes between the two Governments, explanatory of the plan and scope of the treaty, leaving the convention itself very simple in outline.

RESPITE FOR WOMAN LEPER

Will Not Be Taken to Penikese Island Until Next Week.

The Italian woman, who was removed from her home in Salem street last week and pronounced a leper by the Massachusetts General Hospital authorities, will not be removed to Penikese Island until next week. This announcement was made yesterday by Dr. Joshua F. Lewis of the State Board of Charities. Dr. Lewis said that there was but one mail a week to Penikese Island and it would be several days before an answer to his letter could be received. In the meantime the woman is still isolated in the pest house in Southampton street.

MRS. LODGE A COTTAGER.

Senator's Daughter-in-Law to Pass Summer in Newport.

NEWPORT, May 13.—Mrs. George Cabot Lodge of Boston has arrived here on a cottage-hunting expedition. Last season Mrs. Lodge and children spent the Summer in Newport with Mrs. Henry Whitaker Gray on Rhode Island avenue.

Mrs. Lodge, who is the widowed daughter-in-law of Senator Lodge, is well known among the cottage colony here.

SEVERAL LIVES LOST IN FOREST FIRES

At Least Two Missing in District About Hyannis, Others May Have Perished.

LOSSES IN THE MILLIONS

Thousands of Acres Are Burned Over in New England and Whole Towns Fight Fire.

At least two and possibly more lives have been lost, a number of persons are unaccounted for, many have been dangerously burned and millions of dollars have been lost in the great forest fires that have swept New England during the last few days.

Because of the severe drought a large section of New England has been menaced by flames. Down on the Cape in the vicinity of Hyannis the flames roared last night with uncontrollable fury. At Amesbury the fire fighters, numbering practically the whole male population, were kept busy.

A dispatch from Plainfield, Ct., said that the woods were aflame and that game wardens had made several arrests of persons suspected of setting the fires.

Two Lost At Hyannis.

Two men at least, possibly more, are thought to have lost their lives, several men have been painfully burned and six square miles of woodland have been burned over in the worst forest fire that ever swept over the Hyannis section.

Two Portuguese men are missing. They were caught between the main fire and a "back fire" on the Mary Dunn road. Forester H. C. Bacon said to-night that he had no hope of finding the two Portuguese alive.

Several other men were not accounted for up to nine o'clock to-night.

Frank Hallett, son of Charles Hallett, was caught between the fire lines and was severely burned. He is under a doctor's care now and will probably recover.

All last night 1,200 men fought to save the village of Hyannis. The village was surrounded by fire and seemed doomed. Only the arrival of help from this and other towns saved Hyannis. The flames were checked by back-firing after one-third of the entire woodland section near the village was consumed. The damage to standing timber will amount into the thousands.

Fire Started at Barnstable.

The fire started on the Barnstable public dump. Fanned by a lively breeze the flames swept over to the Yarmouth yard, then doubled back to Hyannis before the firefighting force could hold them. The fire leaped across Mary Dunn road and was not checked in that direction till it had charred every stick of timber up to Hathaway Pond.

The work of firefighting was carried on vigorously and with trained judgment. Aid poured in from surrounding towns and was put to work by Forester Bacon as fast as it came.

As fast as flames were checked in one direction a patrol was established to watch for fire springing up again in that vicinity.

A fire which started to-day on the George DeLanger farm in Amesbury, near the Salisbury line and not far from the historic Chain bridge, swept over toward Salisbury, burned over several hundred acres, destroyed thousands of dollars worth of woodland and was still burning at night.

Over 100 Salisbury and Amesbury men turned out to aid the Salisbury fire department. The fire spread out over a frontage of 200 yards. Dense smoke rose and rolled over the Merrimack river to the Newburyport shore, obscuring the broad stream for several yards.

Farm Buildings Menaced.

The fire was discovered in a field in the rear of DeLanger's house and barn. It consumed a valuable pine grove. Creeping over the Salisbury line, in spite of frantic efforts to stop it, the fire blazed on till it threatened to burn the buildings on the John Golden farm. Golden is an extensive milk and cream producer and has valuable dairy buildings, barns and stock.

The farm buildings and house were saved by heroic efforts. The Salisbury fire department, equipped with hand chemicals, turned out. Citizens came out in answer to a fire call, armed with buckets, brooms and other fire fighting implements.

By mid-afternoon there were 100 men at work along the fire lines. They fought the flames incessantly and by supper time were badly exhausted.

From the starting place the fire started toward the river also. The flames travelled through the woods and undergrowth along the Rabbit road, which is a cut-off from Chain Bridge to the State road running from Amesbury to Salisbury.

By 7 o'clock the flames were encroaching on the fringe of woods around Salisbury village. No immediate fear was felt for the village proper as there is a gap of fully a half-mile between the edge of the woods and the town. But outlying farmers viewed the spread of the flames with keen apprehension.

FRAMINGHAM FOLKS DINED BY MR. LOTT

Don't Know Mr. Lott? Why, He's the Edison Company's Right of Way Man.

SELECTMAN WALSH GUEST

All the Diners Had Helped Mr. Lott Kill Municipal Lighting at Framingham.

A TWENTY-DOLLAR dinner at the Hotel Bellevue, given by the Edison Electric Illuminating Company to some of its best friends and boosters, is the subject of a discussion out in Framingham, the guests of the Edison having been prominent in the Edison's Framingham campaign against municipal lighting.

The $20 dinner was given ostensibly by Former State Senator William H. Lott of Boston. Lott is the Edison's "right of way" man. He served in the Senate ten or a dozen years ago. He lives at No. 4 Cushing avenue, Dorchester.

Leroy E. Gould, teamster and contractor.

Simeon O'Connell, hotel man.

Edward J. Brown, marketman at the Center.

J. P. Fina, former saloonist at Saxonville.

Charles Adams, operative.

William Mahern, South Framingham druggist.

Everybody on this list, with the possible exception of Mahern, the druggist, was out on the firing line against municipal lighting. Mahern was at the dinner, he says, simply because he happened to fall in with the party and was urged to "come along."

Efforts yesterday to find Lott, the right of way man, and get him to supply a copy of the dinner bill proved unavailing. It is known, however, that the feast was something scrumptious. Some of the guests couldn't help talking about it when they got back to Framingham. Now everybody else is talking about it.

Had Narrow Escape.

The Edison had a narrow escape at Framingham from seeing another municipal plant established and if the dinner cost a $100 a plate, some say, the workers got no more than was due them. The advocates of a municipal lighting plant lost out by only fifty votes.

The question was put to a popular vote and on March 6 the polls were open all day. In order to pass the municipal lighting order a two-thirds vote was required.

At 6 o'clock in the evening, it was said yesterday, only a normal vote had been cast. It looked as if the order had been adopted.

There was still three hours for work on belated voters, however, and the friends of the Edison company rolled up their sleeves and got busy. When the polls closed, at 9 o'clock, municipal lighting was dead for at least another year. This was the State of the ballot:

Whole number of votes cast	655
Necessary to municipal lighting (two-thirds)	430
Yes	379
No	256

Lott on the Job.

"Right of Way" Lott was on the job until the last gun was fired. When it was over he decided that the twelve citizens who had done the most to help him should be his dinner guests in town. There was no frantic opposition from the twelve who had saved Framingham.

There was a good deal of talk in Framingham at the time of the meeting about the activity of Chairman Walsh of the Board of Selectmen. Walsh argued openly against the adoption of the municipal order. He quoted frequently from a book called "The Danger Signal," or "Defunct Municipal Lighting Plants."

A Committee on Lighting had been looking into the subject for the town. When its members asked Selectman Walsh where the "Danger Signal" came from, Mr. Walsh allowed that he had got it from Lott, the right of way man.

"I opposed the project," Walsh said yesterday to the Sunday AMERICAN, "because of the outlay of money which would be required. Did I go to the dinner? O, I've been to many dinners in the last six years. I don't consider it a bribe to be taken into dinner. A dinner is a social affair. We didn't talk shop at that dinner."

A total of 256 votes was cast the Edison way on March 6. Framingham was wondering last night if right of way Lott will continue to take the supporters of the Edison to the Hotel Bellevue in blocks of seven.

POISON DOSE FATAL.

Woman, Temporarily Deranged, Ends Life with Paris Green.

Miss Mary McGrath, employed in the home of Frank Meley at No. 123 F street, South Boston, who took a dose of Paris green yesterday, died of the effect of the poison at the City Hospital last night. The woman had suffered from hallucinations.

Cupid Makes a Double Shot

Eaton Boys Win Vose Girls

First of Fair June Brides

Miss Mabel Vose (in smaller picture at left) and Miss Annie Vose, sisters who are to be married to the Eaton brothers in June.

THAT little chap who goes prowling around shooting his arrows into the hearts of young people will probably take his two weeks off with pay, this year, immediately following the first of June. On that day he will officiate incog. at the marriage of Miss Annie Vose to Mr. Ezra Eaton, and the marriage of Miss Mabel Vose to Mr. Malcolm Eaton.

The Vose girls are sisters. Ezra and Malcolm Eaton are brothers. The double wedding will take place two weeks from Thursday next in the Second Church in Boston, Unitarian.

How lovely are these first of 1911's June brides the camera has told much better than words would tell. Having been so remarkably successful at the opening of his season, Master Cupid may be excused if he boldly demands a vacation and turns the business over to assistants.

The Misses Vose are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Vose of No. 193 Bay State road. They formerly resided in Marlboro street. The Messrs. Eaton are the sons of Charles S. Eaton, president, treasurer and a director of the company which conducts Thompson Spa, in Washington street.

The quartet have been boy and girl sweethearts since knickerbocker and pigtail days. Since they grew up, they have been quite inseparable. "Father" Eaton, some time since, abandoned Commonwealth avenue to make his home at Marlborough Neck.

"Don't go!" D. Cupid warned the Eaton brothers.

"If it is just the same to you Dad," Ezra and Malcolm said to their father, "we'll put up with the Somerset for a while. It's handy to the stores."

"Father" Eaton is a knowing as well as an indulgent papa. Having been a youngster himself, once, Mr. Eaton smiled and said all right. The boys are associated with him in business.

MISSING DRUGGIST FOUND IN COLORADO

PUEBLO, Col., May 13.—Picking up the fragments of a journal devoted to the druggists' trade, in which was contained a startling account of his own disappearance, Albert H. Grimshaw, until March 2 a prosperous pharmacist of Somerville, Mass., read the story of a mystery in which he was the central figure and through it was restored to reason, which, he says, deserted him more than two months ago when he stepped aboard a street car in Somerville bound for Boston, carrying $400 in currency with which he intended to settle some accounts.

The strange return of memory occurred while Grimshaw was camping as a tramp under a Denver & Rio Grande Railroad bridge thirteen miles north Pueblo. He walked the entire distance to this city, where he told his startling story to detectives at the central station.

Grimshaw owned a drugstore at No. 288 Highland avenue, Somerville. His home is at No. 90 Cedar street. He left his place of business at 10:30 o'clock on the forenoon of March 2, carrying a bag that contained about $400 in cash. It was believed that he was going to visit some of the wholesale drug firms on business and then make some bank deposits. From the time he left his store up to yesterday not a word had been heard from him. He had an engagement, it was learned, at noon on the day he disappeared, but he did not keep it, at that point on his bicycle at the time.

SAVE CAPTAIN AND 5 ON A LEAKING BARGE

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., May 13.—Captain W. H. Williams and his crew of five men of the barge Piscataqua, laden with 250,000 feet of lumber, were saved from death by drowning to-night when the barge sprang a leak. Fishermen, passing in a schooner, summoned another tug from Portsmouth, and the barge was towed to Portsmouth harbor, with the cargo waterlogged.

The barge was in tow of the tug Piscataqua, Captain Hall, it was down below the waterline when the fishermen sighted it. The men went ashore at York, summoned help and a tug was sent from this city. The two tugs brought the barge safely to port. The lumber was consigned to the Blacker & Shepard Company of Boston by the Berlin Mills of Portland. The barge was just off the railway at Portland and the captain and crew were at a loss to explain the accident.

MUTINY IN MEXICO REBEL CAMP

Madero's Chiefs, Orozco and Villa, Demand Execution of Federal General Navarro, but Rebel Leader Saves His Foe

Insurrecto Army Riots at Juarez, Across From El Paso, and Mutineers Declare General Madero to Be "Under Arrest"

Twelve Thousand Revolutionists Under Figueroa Massing at the Gates of the City of Mexico to Attack the Capital

MEXICO CITY, May 13.—An unconfirmed rumor that President Diaz resigned at noon today was widely circulated this afternoon. No official could be found to confirm or deny it.

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS.

EL PASO, Texas, May 13.—There was a riot and meeting in Juarez this morning. Madero's insurrectos were for going on the warpath. Crying "Death to Navarro," they rushed in hundreds to the beaten federal's house of confinement. They wanted a taste of federal blood.

Orozco, one of the fighting leaders of the insurrectos, was at the head of the tumult. His wrath took highest form when he flourished his pistol in President Madero's face and declared that executive "under arrest," also Orozco demanded the abdication of the provisional presidency by Madero, and that his cabinet get out of office quickly and for good.

Madero, for his part, carried himself with discretion and courage. He did not give up Navarro, he did not order him shot, he did not abdicate and he was not arrested. In the end the violent Orozco put up his pistol and walked off with Madero to talk it over. It looked warm for the moment, however, and what Americans were in Juarez let no grass grow under their feet before getting out. With many of the insurrecto Americans are not a popular proposition, nor have they helped with the present war cry, "Keep Mexico for Mexicans."

Madero Saves Navarro's Life.

Rescuing to General Navarro, President Madero is bound to save his life. A large per cent. of the insurrectos insist that he be shot. Navarro is on parole, but must not leave Juarez. For the latter reason he does not leave his quarters in the Baron Von Hueser house, save on Madero's orders. There he remains, closely shut in with his staff. He believes he would be shot down on sight by the insurrectos were he to walk about the Juarez streets.

For that matter President Madero, while he has some men in perfect hand, has feared the same thing. Navarro sticks to his room and writes letters to his wife in Chihuahua and lies on his brass bed and sadly ruminates over the down-plunging changes of a week. Seven days ago he was the unchallenged master of Juarez and no one might stand before his frowns. Now a prisoner and a beaten man, the cry is "Death to Navarro!" and his appearance in Juarez streets means a bullet through his heart.

The story of insurrecto hatred of Navarro is this:

In the battle of Escado, Navarro took three prisoners. He turned them over—these three insurrectos—to the local judge, and they were put in the calaboose for four days. The local judges were afraid to do more because of the local insurrecto sentiment.

It was putting a premium on rebellion. Diaz sent a brief message to Navarro.

"Take no more prisoners," said Diaz. At the battle of Cerro Prieta thirty-six insurrectos laid down their arms. Navarro stood them up against a wall and had them shot. The shooting made a stir. Notes passed between Washington and the Diaz government. The Diaz government denied the shooting. It denies it to-day.

Navarro says nothing. I myself, when I talked with him, did not ask the agent general concerning the bloody business—hardly five months old—for obvious reasons. He was in trouble enough as it stood.

In spite of Diaz's denials and Navar-

Your Wants Are Classified On "Want Ad" Pages

MADERO IS ARRESTED BY REBEL MUTINEERS

ro's silence, the insurrecto knew. The evidence which proved the shooting to death of the Cerro Prieta thirty-six was to his mind complete. Navarro, in the common insurrecto's heart, was convicted. Wherefore, by way of vengeance and a just reward, the insurrectos broke into to-day's mutiny, demanding that Navarro be shot.

President Madero is in a dilemma. It is finally resolved, both from reasons of humanity and policy, to protect the life of Navarro. And yet the feeling of the insurrectos was such that he hesitated to let Navarro leave Juarez. Many thought a move of that kind would be the signal for Navarro's death. It might mean, too, the downfall of Madero.

President Madero has talked of exchanging Navarro. Not a few insist that the insurrectos would not allow this. They said that sooner or later Navarro would be killed. Meanwhile, Navarro has been taking the situation with calm sadness.

Sent Across to United States.

To-day's mutiny has brought Navarro's fate to a focus. Madero, to make him perfectly safe, has sent him across the bridge to American soil. The move will have its sequel. It will fan the fires of insurrecto hatred against Americans. It may even spell the downfall of Madero. The insurrectos are as hard to handle first as a runaway horse and may in a moment, be hurled Madero's control.

Madero deserves credit and a wreath. He added courage at a certain crisis, the sharpest sort. He took life, position, everything in his hands when he unwithstood the pistol flourishing Orozco and sent Navarro to the north side of the river, where waves the safety of stars and Stripes.

The President, taken with the resignation of Secretary of War Dickinson, has left the military gentleman in charge of the certain state of mind. Many believe that day is not far off when they themselves will be ordered on to Juarez. But a handful of Americans would settle the matter.

$750 For Auto to Flee.

I met a gentleman who had paid $750 to be brought from Chihuahua in an automobile. He didn't like to part with the money, but he feared for his life.

Going back to General Navarro. He has been the guest with his staff of President Madero and stopping at the house occupied by Madero in Juarez and owned by Baron Von Roeder, a Mexicanized German nobleman. This latter garrison, by the way, is altogether and wisely absent, but the insurrectos are good caretakers and called on General Navarro just before to-day's trouble. My interpreter was a New York boy named Brandon. His parents are just now in Panama and his uncle occupies the Brandon house on West Ninety-Second street.

Young Brandon is entitled to more than passing notice. He has been with the insurrectos through a dozen fights and was shot twice. His excuse for being present is that he is the correspondent of a Mexican newspaper, published at the capital, but the truth is that he likes the tempest. In both armies he is considered for his nerve and steady courage.

Presented to Navarro.

Mr. Brandon presented me to General Navarro and to the rebel as interpreter. There was with the beaten general Lieutenant-Colonel Bates, Major Pullie, Captain Gonzales—on crutches, with a bullet through his leg—and Lieutenant Landolt.

Nothing could have been more profitably polite than the reception given me by General Navarro. The old veteran has seen forty-eight years of military service and is seventy-six years old. He has the appearance of a retired general, gray-bearded, straight-nosed, but careworn, and, I should add, without sorrowful over his defeat. If he felt himself sorrowful nor afraid. If he had fears for his life, he kept them hidden. When he surrendered he had 400 men. There were men with him, too, who escaped. His force when beaten must have been 600. The actual fighting force with which he gave up his sword hardly counted 200 men. "They have given me nothing to eat for two days," said General Navarro, during the hours for his surrender, through Mr. Brandon, "and had had no water for two days. I had been given leave to have 100 of my men. They would have been secret service."

I spoke of a possible court-martial by the Diaz government.

"Yes," returned the General, "they will as you say, court-martial me. That is always done in the event of a defeat. It is only an inquiry into causes to see if the defeat was justified. I shall have ample opportunity to make my defense, and I have no doubt of my exoneration. What could I do? Within me was food, and the granite and wounded to [illegible] nothing about the battle, where my men were fighting. The mules were worse than the insurrectos. Besides, we had been forbidden by the American officers to fire toward El Paso and the insurrectos took advantage of that order."

That five Americans were killed and sixteen wounded on the American side of the river during General Navarro's fight did not altogether obey that complained of American order of which the insurrectos were charged with taking such sinful advantage. Statistics prove that it takes 500 pounds of lead moulded into bullets to bit one man in battle. Upon that basis something more than half a ton of bullets must have found their deadly way over the Juarez side of the river.

Military men do not sustain General Navarro's surrender. They say he fought a bad battle, picked out a bad lot of positions. His food gave out, but he should have provided against that chance. His water was cut off, but that too should have been anticipated. In, he had not set a trap for himself and was caught unawares. The truth is his men did not want to fight. They were eager to surrender and almost cheered as they gave up their rifles to the insurrectos. It was the dynamite bombs of the insurrectos which turned their hearts to water. The bombs are about the size of a giant cracker with safety fuses. They have fuses, too, after the manner of a giant cracker. The thrower lights the end of the fuse, watches it sputter up to the point of explosion, and then tosses it over the wall among the Federals. The effect is inexpressibly depressing. These bombs blow men into the air like old rags.

Navarro's "Last Ditch."

Where Navarro made his last stand—the last ditch, as it were—was a big corral or pasite, with abode buildings on the four sides. There were perhaps 200 mules in his corral or pasite. Many mules were hurt by the bombs and as they ran here and there among Navarro's men, screaming, biting, kicking, as frightened mules, they greatly assisted the cause of the insurrectos. Speaking of the dynamite bombs one of the fiercest battles came of just around the corner from the home of Mr. Edwards, who is the consul in Juarez. The insurrectos took to throwing dynamite bombs. Some of these dastardly things fell next door to the Edwards house. Mr. Edwards went out to the men with the fire works and remonstrated.

"You must stop that," said Consul Edwards. "You're too near my house and my family is there."

The insurrecto bowed politely and carried his bombs to another field of action. Within sixty feet of Consul Edwards' house, in all directions, the bulldings were filled with [illegible] pieces. The federals had a barricade of timber and bars of sand within 100 feet of him, and yet no accounts of slain, not to say no respectful of American rights, were those same insurrectos that never a skin of a bullet can be found on the Edwards house. They surely moved up the ground all around it, however.

Among others with whom I have talked is Gustave Madero, Minister of Finance under the presidential presidency of his brother. He is smooth-shaven, hawk-nosed, his face indicates energy and determination. Clearly like his relative, the provisional president, he is a man who knows what he wants and has definite notions of how he means to get them.

We were joined by Colonel Garibaldi, son of the great Garibaldi, and volunteer insurrecto from away Italy. Colonel Garibaldi has been with the insurrectos some three months.

"What will be your next move?" asked I. "Do not the insurrectos intend to practically control of the two big northern States of Sonora and Chihuahua. What is to be done next?"

Move South, Next Move.

Madero and Garibaldi smiled as might men who had understanding of the matter. "What will we do next?" repeated Madero. "Move south; we can't go north," and his eyes twinkled, "effectually going into the United States which would be, under the circumstances, highly improper. We must, therefore, go south."

"Yes," repeated Garibaldi, "we must move toward Chihuahua. We have Juarez and will never lose it. But we must not stand still. As with a man on a bicycle, to stand still is to fall down."

"Where do you look for the next big battle?" I asked.

According to Madero and Garibaldi, it would be at Chihuahua. They anticipated even an easier thing with Chihuahua than with Juarez.

"Two-thirds of the people of Chihuahua," said Madero, "are with us in heart, and no wonder, since we fight for justice and an equality of right for all men. Two-thirds of the Federal army are likewise with us. Many who fought against us in Juarez here are now with us.

Guerita Angela Madero, sister of the Maderos, came up. She is a beautiful girl, has ideals and warm sympathies. She had been visiting the wounded federals and insurrectos alike, for, as she said, they were all "her brothers."

"Angela is Coming."

The young lady, clad in simple black and white, is the Florence Nightingale of the insurrectos. They hail her as "Angela," and are never as enthusiastic as at the mere sight of her. You see some dark saturnine insurrecto, as silent as an Indian, under his big Chihuahua hat. Clad in roughest raiment, weather stained and weather beaten, draped with cartridge belts, hand gripping his Mauser as though it were his final hope, he scouts the climax of the dangerous inhuman guerilla. At once his dark face lights up as with a sudden splash of sunshine. "Angela" is coming.

The American belief is that Madero's government will remain and the insurrectos prove victorious. After walking about among the insurrectos who crowded the Juarez plaza and thronged the Juarez streets, studying faces, and exchanging inquiries for answers, I arrived at the same conclusion. During my two hours' stay among them, I got up quite a feeling of respect for the insurrectionists and insurrectos.

No men could carry themselves better than do these victorious rebels. Everywhere is order, sobriety, and the streets, being crowded from wall to wall, are as quiet as a church. Not a sign of coarseness.

Women and children came and went among the rough-looking sentry, all armed to the teeth and in numbers thousand, safe from look or word or hint. There was a right purpose, too. Behind every one of them, be felt like a patriot and conducted himself as one. There was no looting, no robberies, no violences; every door is guaranteed and only the owner knows in and out. By Monday the Military government of Juarez will be complete and 200 picked and select gendarmes will rid of their permanent police duty.

12,000 Men in the Field.

Twelve thousand men, armed and fully equipped for battle with the Diaz government, are mustering to-day in Guerrero for attacks first on Iguala and then on Cuitpancingo as steps in their advance on Mexico City.

The men under command of General Ambrosio Figueroa have already begun their campaign. Couriers are speeding to all divisions of the revolutionary forces, larger than that which the government of Mexico can muster, calling on it for battle.

HARVARD OARSMAN DROWNS IN CHARLES

Was a Hard Student.

Outside of rowing, Parsons studied hard. He was quiet and was becoming noticed as a well-conducted chap. He was establishing a strong circle of friendship among his classmates.

Physically he was well built, about five feet, seven inches tall and weighing 155 pounds, muscular and with the chest and arm development that comes from rowing. He practised almost daily in the single scull.

At 1:45 yesterday afternoon he started out in a "comp" from the Weld Club. A "comp" is a combination of two boats' crews. It is more treacherous even than the ordinary shell, as has to be handled in the water by the oars. A "comp" sculler has to know how to feather his oars well.

Arthur Bigelow of the freshman class accompanied Parsons in another "comp." Each wore the usual rowing costume of athletic shirt, linen knickers and socks. The rowing shoes are stiffened at the heel and the toes are slipped into them like moccasins. Bigelow and Parsons rowed upstream three-quarters of a mile.

Complained of the Wind.

Bigelow and Parsons told me the wind was too fresh for him and that he was going back to the float. He turned and started down-stream. That is the last I saw of him.

Parsons kept on down-stream, under the Boylston street bridge and just past the Weld Boat House on the Brighton shore where the river makes a bend. This is a dangerous spot. Two or three other lives have been lost there. The water eddies and there are cross currents. Even the Cambridge side a huge warm water discharge pipe puts out under water from the Elevated power house, emptying gallons of warm water into the river. This causes alternating currents of warm and cold water at the bend.

Opposite the power house Parsons started to turn, apparently to cross to the float. Then came the deadly gust of wind, the up-set and the drowning. Parsons sank like lead. He made no struggle or effort to swim, so far as the horrified spectators saw.

Patrick Manning, the Weld attendant, who made heroic effort to reach Manning in time, brought the empty shell back to float. Then students and attendants put out in launches to find the body. The police came in power-boats with grapples.

Police Find the Body.

All the afternoon they dragged the river valley. Many spectators gathered on the plan of driving power-boats around in fast circles in the stream to churn the water in hope that the disturbance would raise the body. This has been known to succeed but it failed this time.

At 5:30 Patrolman Ford of the Metropolitan Park Police caught his grapple in the bow just off the Brighton shore. Parsons's body and raised Parsons to the surface. The water was fifteen feet deep at this place. The body had not moved from where it first sank on the bottom, as near as could be estimated.

Medical Examiner McGrath viewed the body and arrangements were made to prepare it for shipment to Detroit. A telegram was sent to Parsons's Father.

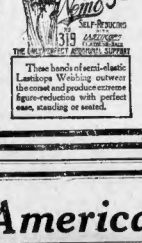
Wonderful New Self-Reducing Models at 3.00



Nemo 3.00 Self-Reducing 319 Lastikops Webbing

THE LASTIKOPS PRINCIPLE ASSURES SUPPORT

Millions of women will find the very corsets they "have been looking for" in the new Nemo Self-Reducing Corsets, Nos. 319 and 321—corsets with very long skirt and great figure-reducing power, that are absolutely comfortable whether you're standing or seated.

This EXTREME EASE with FASHIONABLE SLENDERNESS is made possible only by the use of that remarkable new Nemo fabric, Lastikops Webbing, which never loses its elasticity and will outwear any corset.

No. 319—SELF-REDUCING, for short, stout figures; broad bands of Lastikops Webbing around hips (see cut); very long skirt, low bust; for short stout figures 3.00

No. 321—SELF-REDUCING, similar to No. 319, but higher bust and underarm, for tall and medium stout figures 3.00

MAY SOLVE MYSTERY OF ROLLINS' DEATH

FARMINGTON, N. H., May 13.—Acting on information said to have been given in a deathbed confession, and which has already led to the discovery of human bones in a pile of rocks in Middleton, County Attorney George P. Hughes and Sheriff Frank I. Smith of Dover will come here on Monday to begin an investigation in the hope of clearing up the famous Rollins disappearance mystery. It is now alleged that Samuel Rollins, who disappeared eleven years ago, was the victim of a blow delivered by another man, who is now under police surveillance.

Rollins dropped out of sight January 15, 1900. Since that time his relatives had heard nothing that would give them a clew as to his fate, until this week. A person said to have been on friendly terms with the missing man, is alleged to have confessed to a share in the killing of Rollins' body. It and Orrin Rollins, brother of Samuel, and farmers of this town were informed that if they would uncover a certain heap of stones in Middleton, they would come across their kinsman's skeleton. The bones were found, and are held here awaiting the arrival of the county attorney.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD BOY IS BURNED TO DEATH

Parents Fail to See Tragedy as Old Mattress on Veranda Is Destroyed.

LAWRENCE, May 13.—Four-year-old Nolan, son of Rev. Moses Ahlfeder, rector of St. George's Syrian Greek orthodox church, was burned to death on the veranda of the rectory at No. 293 Elm street to-night. The boy's mother noticed a blaze in an old mattress on the porch. Her husband rang in a fire alarm. Firemen used chemicals to put out the fire. Later, as Nolan was missing at bedtime, a search was started. His parents found his dead body, burned to a cinder, in the mattress. One of the neighbors told of seeing the boy playing on the mattress with matches this afternoon.

Held for Stabbing Boys.

Royal A. Chandler, a shoe worker, was arraigned in the Chelsea Police Court yesterday on charges of stabbing three small boys in the neck during a parade of persons who sympathized with the Chelsea striking shoe workers. Chandler was held in $500 for the juvenile session on Thursday next. The boys are William Finn, Morris Zimble, and Israel Kaslan.

ANOTHER 'VALJEAN' CAUGHT IN NATICK

Paul E. Hughes, Living Exemplary Life for 5 Years, Arrested for Robbery.

Jean Valjean, Hugo's incomparable hero, was recalled by the arrest of Paul E. Hughes, who was dragged from a trusted position in Natick, taken to Newark, N. J., yesterday, and brought to book for a crime he is alleged to have committed five years ago.

It will be recalled that Valjean, the thief, reformed. He built up a large business and stood high in the esteem of the people of his town.

Hughes came from New Jersey to Massachusetts, lived an exemplary life, secured a good position and stood high in the estimation of his employer and acquaintances.

He even married with the belief that his past was buried. If ever the shadow fell on him of impending danger he did not show it. As head shipper of the box factory of C. W. Coombs he held a position that enabled him and his wife and child to live in comfort.

Then the blow fell. Police Chief Hiram Brown of Natick stepped up to Hughes on Friday night.

"You are under arrest, Hughes," he said. "They want you for that job in Newark five years ago."

Like Valjean's Case.

It was just like this that Javert, the Hugo detective, was wont to appear unexpectedly before poor Valjean and gather him again and again into the police toils.

"Arrested as a thief," exclaimed Coombs, the employer of Hughes, "it is nonsense! I don't believe it!"

But even as Valjean could not deny that he had been a thief, Hughes could not deny that he was wanted by the police of Newark. And so he was torn away from his wife and child and taken back to Newark and locked up.

By a strange coincidence his cell was next to that of his brother, John Hughes, under arrest for stealing $800 from the Lackawanna Railroad.

A dispatch from Newark says that the Natick Hughes was arrested five years ago on the charge that he robbed an old man who lived with him, named Edgar Sells, of $65 and some jewelry, knocking him senseless with a club preparatory to doing it. The stolen property was valued at over $600.

It is said that Hughes disappeared from Newark and was later arrested in Boston where he was employed as a shipping clerk in a five and two-cent store. He was taken to Newark and furnished bail. When his trial was called he could not be found and his bond was forfeited.

Wife Believes in Him.

Then began a wide search for Hughes, the Newark Dispatch says, that covered many States. By accident Newark detectives found out that he was in Natick.

A photograph of the missing man was sent to Chief Brown and he had no difficulty in arresting the man. Brown took the prisoner to Newark.

Mr. Coombs said yesterday:

"Hughes had worked for me for two and a half years and his conduct was exemplary.

Mrs. Hughes was seen at her home, No. 19 North Main street, Natick. Her eyes were red from weeping.

"I have the greatest faith in my husband," she said. "He has told me everything and I feel that everything will soon be all right. I was married to him in New York nearly five years ago. He told me something of his past. He told it always, for that he had done nothing wrong."

A friend of Hughes to whom he had confided some of his past said that Hughes was indicted for robbery in Newark, but that he had stayed around there a year and a half and as nothing came of it he left and came to Massachusetts to start a new again, thinking that the case had been dropped against him.

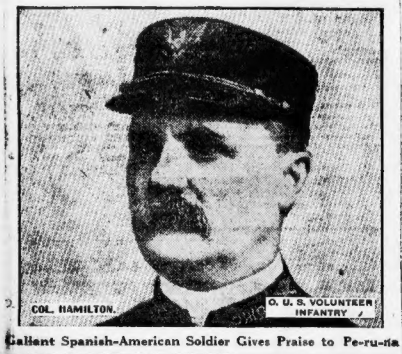
FOR BIG BUILDING FUND.

Pittsfield Father Mathew Men to Start Campaign.

PITTSFIELD, May 13.—From May 16 to the 20th inclusive the Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society of this city will conduct a building campaign to obtain a $40,000 fund with which to build a new home on their Melville street lot. The work will in charge of President Robert J. Stanton and the seven governors of the society. Opposing teams with captains and lieutenants will solicit funds, and each noon teams will meet at lunch at a central headquarters in the Valley block. There a prominent speaker each day will address the teams while the Ladies' Aid Society serves a lunch. Outside the headquarters a monstrous clock will indicate from day to day the amount raised.

COL. HAMILTON

His Experience in the Army as Well as in His Home.



COL. HAMILTON. U. S. VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

Col. Arthur L. Hamilton, of the Seventh Ohio Volunteers, writes as follows:

"I have used Peruna myself and in my family for the last seven years. I have already written you about the good results I experienced with your remedy during the Spanish-American War.

"My command used your Peruna during our service in the Spanish-American War, and I will say this, that if the War Department records are consulted, it will be found that the casualties in my regiment were less than in any other regiment of the Army Corps while at Camps Alger, Meade and Bushnell. The total deaths in my regiment during the seven months' service were seven out of a total number of 1400. I, of course, cannot help but think that Peruna certainly was a great benefit to my command."

Mr. Samuel McKinley, 1215 Grand Ave., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "I can honestly say I owe my life to Peruna.

"Traveling from town to town, having to go into all kinds of badly heated stores and buildings, sometimes standing up for hours at a time while plying my trade as auctioneer, it is only natural that I had colds frequently. Last December I contracted a severe case, which, though neglected on my part, settled on my lungs. When almost too late I began doctoring, but without avail, until I heard of Peruna. It cured me, so I cannot praise it too highly."

Mr. W. J. Harper, Lehigh, Cleveland Co., Arkansas, writes: "I do not know how to express my thanks to you for the good you have done me in treating for catarrh.

"I was a great sufferer from the effect of chronic catarrh of the head and nose. I was continually hawking and spitting, and I had entirely lost my sense of smell. I had tried various remedies, but nothing did me any good.

"At last I tried Peruna as a last resort, and I am thankful to say that after using ten bottles of Peruna I am once more well of catarrh of the head and nose."

Great Wall Paper Sale

Do you intend purchasing wall paper this season? If so, we ask you to visit our wall paper department. We claim that we are offering better values than can be obtained elsewhere in Boston.

We are confident that we can save you from 25% to 50% of the price you would pay elsewhere for the same papers.

This sale exemplifies the power of cash. Two large wall paper manufacturers had great stocks on hand which they desired to turn into money. We bought both lots at about the price of the raw stock before it was printed. We have

Hundreds of Handsome Patterns

The very same qualities and patterns that are retailed elsewhere in Boston at from 12c to 40c a roll. Our prices on them range from

6c to 15c a roll

This is an opportunity to purchase desirable wall paper at less than wholesale prices. There is no limit to the quantity, as we have hundreds of thousands of rolls—enough for everyone.

ENDLESS NOTE CHAIN IN THE ARNOLD CASE

PHILADELPHIA, May 13.—Search for the missing Dorothy Arnold has taken a new turn.

The country is to be flooded with an endless chain of letters asking information concerning the young woman. Miss Arnold's classmates at Bryn Mawr are promoting this latest endeavor to obtain trace of her whereabouts, believing that she is alive.

Within the last week several of the young women who were graduated from Bryn Mawr with Miss Arnold held a meeting and decided to request each of the fifty-odd members of their class to address ten letters to friends directing attention sharply to the case of the missing girl and requesting their co-operation in the search that is being made for her.

The usual form of letter was provided for. Classmates of Miss Arnold were merely requested to furnish a description of the girl and ask persons communicated with to notify members of the class or Miss Arnold's parents of any clue they might discover.

Approximately 500 letters were sent out. The recipient of every letter was requested to address ten additional letters to friends, in turn asking these ten persons to follow the plan for creating an endless chain of missives.

Miss Arnold's classmates hope that by this method interest will be stimulated in the search, which at present has practically been abandoned by the police and private detectives.

JUNIORS AT BROWN PLAN A BIG WEEK

PROVIDENCE, May 13.—The junior demonstration at Brown University will begin Thursday and continues for three days. The chief features will be the presenting of "The Rivals" by a cast from the junior class; the junior "Prom," and the Pi Kappa Farce which is usually the funniest bit of travesty during the junior year.

The nature of the event will be the portrayal of a country fair. The setting for the scene will be known Field in the rear of the college buildings. Here will be all the features of a genuine country fair, the African dodger, the hot corn venders and pop corn peddlers. Le Count and Peary, and Mutt and Jeff will also be on hand. The whole affair promises to be a scream.

On Thursday, the 18th, the Sock and Buskskin Club will present "The Rivals" at the Providence Opera House. Professor Thomas Crosby has had the cast in preparation and his work has been well done.

The cast is as follows:

Sir Anthony Absolute	C. T. Calder
Jack Absolute	J. T. Waller
Bob Acres	J. C. Hall
Faulkland	W. S. Dennett
Sir Lucius O'Trigger	D. G. Donovan
Fag	H. V. Kendall
David	H. C. Bell
Mrs. Malaprop	A. A. Bates
Lydia	K. H. Ryan
Lucy	R. H. Hall

BOY BADLY INJURED BY RUNAWAY HORSE

While playing in the Fenway yesterday afternoon, eight-year-old Robert Snyder, of No. 9 Goldsmith place, Roxbury, was knocked down and probably fatally injured by a runaway horse driven by Robert Graham.

Graham was out with his brother, who is a riding master, and was touring to the Middle path the horse which the younger Graham was riding began rearing and plunging, the little Snyder boy was playing in the bushes, almost on the path. He was thrown by the horse's bounds.

Edward F. Gleason took the injured boy to the Children's Hospital, where, last night, but slight hope was held out for his recovery.

Plans for Garden Party.

Plans for a garden party to be held on Monday next, Patriots' day, between 3 and 7 o'clock, at a date to be decided later, are being arranged by St. Gabriel's church. The City Point people are much interested in the plans of Rev. Father Twomey for the new school building and assembly hall, and all are working hard to make the affair a success. The pastor of this church is arranging for a wider party to be held in the parish hall on East Fifth street, next Friday evening.

MRS. HORACE G. ALLEN HURLED FROM AUTO

Wife of Transit Commissioner Narrowly Escapes Serious Injury in Accident.

Mrs. Horace G. Allen, wife of Transit Commissioner Allen, and prominent in Boston society circles, had a narrow escape from death last night, when she was thrown from a large touring car over the head of the chauffeur into the roadway on Beacon street, near Tappan, in Brookline. She was picked up by the occupants of passing automobiles and hurried to her home at No. 1025 Commonwealth avenue, Brighton, where she received medical treatment. Luckily she escaped with a few cuts and bruises and was not dangerously hurt.

Mrs. Allen's auto was being driven by her chauffeur, Andrew Johnson, at a moderate speed out Beacon street, toward her home. Suddenly the main shaft snapped. Acting as a sort of jack, it lifted the tonneau clean from the ground. Mrs. Allen was swiftly catapulted over the head of the driver, over the hood covering the engine, to the street.

As she fell, several women nearby screamed. Mrs. Allen, however, pluckily kept her nerve. Those who administered the first aid to the injured said they regarded her escape from death or serious injury as almost a miracle.

STIR UP HARVARD MEN.

Circular Calls for Big Run to Minneapolis Meeting.

Members of the Harvard Club of Boston are urged in a circular sent out by a committee to attend the fifteenth annual meeting of the Associated Harvard Clubs at Minneapolis, June 9 and 10. It is planned to have the Boston party go on a special train leaving this city at 2 p. m., June 7. President Lowell will be with the party. The appeal, which is signed by James J. Storrow, chairman; Walter C. Bayles, Sidney Curtis, A. J. Gareau, Edmund E. Wheelwright and John W. Hallowell, ends with these inspiring words: "Please don't treat this invitation as a card to an afternoon tea but answer promptly saying you will come and asking us to reserve your room and berth likewise. If you cannot come don't be a clam but let us know, even if you cannot shake off the coils of your provincial habit, and rejuvenate by coming."

Coffee Party Aids Charity.

A substantial amount was added to the treasury of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of the Church of the Holy Redeemer, East Boston, from the coffee party by the Ladies' Aid Society of The Ladies' Aid Society was formed as an auxiliary to the society with the following officers: Mrs. Mary C. Shill, president; Miss Alice M. Fitzpay, secretary; Miss Elizabeth G. Murpay, treasurer.

ROXBURY HAS FOUR FIRES IN AN HOUR

Department Has a Busy Time Responding to Rapid Succession of Alarms.

Four fires in an hour kept the Roxbury firemen on the jump from 8 to 9 o'clock last night. All the fires were small, but the apparatus was obliged to run from one box to another in rapid succession. At 8 o'clock a call came in from Box 224 for rubbish in a yard at No. 2 Reeds Court. There was no damage. The police of Precinct 12 in Ward 21 at Townsend and Washington streets caught fire. The damage was $50. The roof of the residence of Patrick Barney at No. 6 Arvest place, Roxbury, caught fire at 8:20 p. m., but the fire was put out without damage.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the one-and-a-half story wooden barn in the rear of No. 38 Greenwood avenue, Jamaica Plain, was burned to the ground, with a loss of $500. Clark & Merrill owned the building.

BIKE RACES AT REVERE.

Manager McLean Having Old Track Put in Shape for Opening.

Bicycle fans will soon have a chance to witness their favorite sport in this section. The Old Revere Beach track is being put into shape under the direction of Alec McLean.

At the opening of the racing season, which will take place May 20, White Fern will appear in the feature event, with Al Ford Gaudette, in a half-mile sprint, followed by a two-mile pursuit race. Should a third heat be necessary they will decide the issue by a one-mile sprint race.

Elmer Collins will race George Wiley of Syracuse and Eddie Root of Melrose in a five-mile open with prizes at the end of each lap. They will also be seen in a half-mile sprint.

CATHOLIC UNION NEWS.

Committee Named to Arrange for Convention.

The members of the Catholic Union of Boston will do their best to make the convention of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, to be held in Boston from June 4 to 7 inclusive, a big success. On June 4 they will tender a reception to the delegates at their house on Worcester square.

Arrangements will be in charge of the following important committees: Joseph H. O'Neil, President; George A. Flynn, vice-president; John B. Kelley, secretary-treasurer; William T. A. Fitzgerald, chairman; William H. Sullivan, Felix M. Johnson, Clarence H. Pike, Frank McSorley, John Norton, P. M. Phelan and David D. Leahy.

During the last year the social affairs of the union have been the most successful ever held. The committee has been active, earnest and untiring. Through the social many pleasant friendships have been made.

RATHER a handsome newspaper page, is it not, so made by the large photograph in the centre representing ever so many young indies of the Pippin family. Beautiful girls; what?

Wait! Do you recognize these cruel and unpatriotic young women? Do you know these girls?

The Bachelor Girls of Roxbury and Dorchester!

An Iron-Bound Pledge.

"What of it?" do you ask. Well, this is what of it. List to the sacred pledge that each of the beautiful young women took five years ago on being received into the organization:

I give my most solemn feminine word to my sisters of the Bachelor Club and I do pledge myself:

To make no appointments with young men.

To receive no calls from them.

To write no letters to them.

Never to go to dinner or the theatre with a person of the other sex.

Never to be courted.

Never to wed.

If I break this last promise I pledge myself to pay $25 into the treasury of the Bachelor Girls.

Just to Show the Fellows.

"It may seem strange," President Margaret Dunlap said last night to the reporters, "that in view of this platform we have arranged to give a dancing party next Friday evening in Intercolonial Hall, but the fact is that many of our members thought it would be a fine thing to see just how strong we are in the anti-matrimony faith.

"In all the five years of our history we have lost but two members. One, alas! was my predecessor in the presidency. Her husband paid the twenty-five like a little gentleman. We had some trouble getting the other twenty-five, but we got it.

"We really believe, honestly and truly, that we shall lose no more of our members to the lure of Mr. Mendelssohn's wedding, but, be that as it may, the girls will hold this 'Dare' party just to see."

Let's Call the Roll.

The members of the strange organization are Margaret Dunlap, Anna Doran, Annie Lange, Margaret Carroll, Kitty Kelly, Eva Ditmar, Susie Meldroy, Anna Guthemutt, Lottie Regan, Ella Mooney, Mary Conway, Rose Mulvey and Anna Chiapo.

Some of the young men in the district call the girls' club the "old maids" and as unpatriotic an organization as America ever has known."

"Governor Foss," Claude Hulbert said last night, "can do nothing likely to be of more lasting benefit to the Commonwealth than to get after organizations of this sort with a great big stick. They ought to be investigated, and if they take no such anything like what we have been given to understand they ought to be suppressed."

Other young men said, "Shucks! Claude Hulbert needn't get excited and the Governor needn't do anything."

"There isn't a lass in the lot," one of these young men told the Sunday AMERICAN reporter, "who doesn't carry $25 in her shoe every minute, prepared to pay the club fine for matrimony."

REPUBLICANS IN DOUBT.

Worried About Representative From 7th Plymouth District.

MIDDLEBORO, May 13.—Interest already is being taken in the coming campaign for representative from the Seventh Plymouth District, which this year is represented by Alexander Holmes of Kingston.

According to the number of districts which includes the towns of Middleboro, Kingston, Halifax and Plymouth, the choice of a representative for next year should come from Plymouth. There are so many more voters in this town that to accept a candidate from the outlying towns by the Republicans as has been the custom would mean a dead sure election by the Democrats of this town. The condition of affairs is likely to change the tactics all over the district and discontinue the old rotation scheme.

LOOKS LIKE A HOT SUMMER FOR BIG BILL

William (Big Bill) Kelher will have to spend his Summer in a small cell at the East Cambridge jail unless his friends raise the necessary $50,000 bail which will be necessary before Kelher may enjoy his liberty. At a conference in the Federal Building yesterday it was decided to postpone the re-argument of exceptions in the Kelher case, which was set for May 22, until the Fall sitting of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, which begins on October 3. The re-argument was made necessary through the death of Judge Francis C. Lowell.

50,000 CROWD HALLS AT MISSION EXHIBIT

Groups of Children, 5,000 In All, See Strangely Costumed Visitors.

An immense crowd jammed into Mechanics building to witness the "World in Boston" yesterday. Though actual figures were not obtainable last night a conservative estimate places the number of people who entered the exposition during the day and evening at nearly 50,000.

During the early afternoon the doors had to be closed for nearly half an hour because the great halls would hold no more. In the pageant hall during the afternoon performance every one of the 9,000 seats was filled.

So fast did the people come when the doors opened at 12:40 that the ticket sellers were almost swept from their booth in the entrance hall. At 12:45 the crowd became so great that the doors had to be closed for nearly half an hour, thus giving time for those who had passed into the exhibition hall to go to the pageant hall.

5,000 Children Visitors.

During the morning about 5,000 children from Greater Boston visited the exposition, coming in groups of about 2,500 each. The first group arrived at 9 o'clock and spent the time from that hour until 11 o'clock, when the second group arrived. One of the interesting features of the children's program was an entertainment entitled "The Landing of the Immigrants," given by the young people of Mt. Vernon Church.

During the forenoon 200 disappointed people were left standing on the station platform at Fall River when a special train bound for the "World in Boston" pulled out. Arrangements had been made for 600 people and a train to accommodate that number was made up. At the last minute over 800 people showed up from Fall River and according to Chief Carr "There all squeezed on the train except 200.

From Providence and surrounding towns came 1,500 people, and from Taunton 1,200 came 400 by special train. Among the prominent people who came from these cities were: Rev. R. H. Potter, Rev. F. W. Bradin, Rev. Dr. Pinedi, Rev. J. H. Twitchell, Rev. W. A. Bartlett, Rev. Robert Marshall, George C. Hubert, Winslow Russell, Walter S. Shutz, Edward Mahl, W. F. Calder, C. A. Peter, Harry Levy, George E. Davis and W. H. Howell. Another party came from Franklin, and several smaller parties came from the western part of the State.

To-day will see the last of the great mass meetings held in connection with the "World in Boston." From thirty to seventy missionaries in active service will be present in costume representing various lands. There will be five ten-minute addresses on the general subject, "A Survey of the World Field." A large mixed chorus, under the direction of Henry J. Kilbourn, will sing and special selections by the Fisk Jubilee Singers and the Carlisle Indian Quartet will be given. George Sherwood will preside over the meeting, which will begin at 2:30 and will be held in Pageant hall. Rev. S. M. Gillam will speak of "India," Rev. J. E. Merrill will talk on the "Near East," Rev. R. T. Gale takes the "West," Rev. J. H. Pyle will tell of the "Far East," and Rev. George Alexander McGuire tells of the "South."

To-morrow for Canadians.

To-morrow will be Canadian Day, and special trains will bring parties from Toronto and Montreal, picking up parties from other cities on the way. The address of welcome Monday will be given by Rev. Dr. Samuel B. Capen, president of the exposition, and the response will be by Hon. Alfred S. Morine of Canada. During the afternoon and evening the regular program of the World in Boston will be given, though several special features will take place for the benefit of the visiting Canadians.

At 6:30 the Congregational Brotherhood dinner will be held in the banquet hall, when Rev. Henry A. Atkinson of Chicago will be the speaker. At 6:30 Miss K. Mabel Dew Yahn, a native of Burma, will give a series of songs of her native land from the midway platform, and the closing services will be led by Rev. A. K. MacLennan.

Forty cases of fainting and several cases of slight illness, caused by the heat and crowds, were treated by the medical mission exhibit yesterday. This makes a total of 220 people who have been treated by the missionaries in charge of the exhibit during the exposition. Most of these were women, though there have been a few cases of illness of children.

ARCHER TOURING CAR RAMMED BY TROLLEY

Brookline Hostess and Guest From New Jersey Severely Shaken Up.

Two women were severely shaken up into yesterday afternoon when an inward bound elevated car collided at Massachusetts and Commonwealth avenues with a large touring car owned by Frank W. Archer of Brookline.

In the auto were Mrs. Archer, her guest, Mrs. J. Parent of Ridgefield Park, N. J., and the chauffeur, William S. Foley. Both women were thrown to the floor of the machine, and Mrs. Parent was so jolted it was at first thought her neck had been broken. She was taken to the Archer home in Brookline, and there treated by Dr. Louis Gilbert. No bones were broken, but it was reported that she was seriously ill as a result of the shock. Mrs. Archer also suffered from the shock.

The automobile was proceeding north in Massachusetts avenue, and was about to turn into Commonwealth avenue, when the motorman saw another car smashed into sideways. The automobile was driven to a garage by its own power, having been but slightly damaged.

BROOKLINE MAY PARTY.

St. Lawrence Parish to Raise Funds for Garden Party June 17.

A May party under the auspices of the St. Lawrence's parish, in aid of the garden party fund, will be given at Brookline Town Hall to-morrow. The garden party is scheduled to take place on the grounds of the church on Saturday, June 17. The program to-morrow night will consist of vaudeville, followed by dancing until 12 o'clock. The matrons will be Mrs. Albert Putney, Mrs. George Beveridge, Mrs. James Lovey, Mrs. Bernard Dwyer, Mrs. Timothy Sennett, Mrs. James O'Day, Mrs. Michael Hartigan, Mrs. O'Donahue, Mrs. Gibbons and Mrs. John Sykes.

Committees of ladies in charge of the party are: Miss Mary Carrol, Miss Mary Finnerty, Miss Mary Coleman, Miss Mary O'Laughlin, Miss Judy O'Hearn, Miss Alice McCarthy, Miss Agnes Lally, Miss Anna Cullinane, Miss Mary Barry, Miss Mary Sullivan, Miss Sarah Meehan, Miss Catherine Brennen, Miss Hannah Connolly and Miss Mary McGahey.

Brighton Church Field Day.

On June 24 the members of St. Columkill's Church, Brighton, will hold their annual field day at Rodgers Park. On Wednesday an evening party will be held at Venoli Hall in aid of Fr. Reardon's trip. Mrs. Michael Reardon of Harriet street will be the hostess.

STAGE HOSTLER IS HELD FOR SHOOTING

Mysterious Bombardment Leads to Arrest of the Groom in "The Arcadians."

Three pistol shots were red in rapid succession in Eliot street at 10 o'clock last night, and the police of the Lagrange street station, in an effort to get to the bottom of the bombardment took into custody a young man who said he had just been leading about the race horse that appears in the "Arcadians," the musical play at the Colonial.

When Policemen Miller and Haley got to the young man whom they suspected of firing the shots they grabbed him and hustled him around to the station house.

"Where's your revolver?" they asked.

"I haven't any," replied the prisoner.

"Who did you shoot at?" asked two of the policemen.

"Nobody," said the young man.

The prisoner gave his name as Daniel Mahoney and he said he lived at No. 311 Huntington avenue. The police scurried about a little and found some one, they said, who saw Mahoney in the act of firing three shots at a man about his own age.

Who the human target was the police could not ascertain. From the fact that he disappeared from the neighborhood without a tell-tale crimson trail stringing out behind him led the police to the belief that Mahoney's aim had been bad.

They locked the prisoner, however, on the charge of assault with intent to kill. Later they learned that he had been leading the "Arcadian" horse about the street just before they arrested him.

AID CHURCH BUILDING FUND

Parishioners to Give Entertainment in Winthrop.

Fifty Women Can Secure Distinctive 14.00, 16.00 and 18.00 Millinery Tomorrow at 9.50

ONE of the styles we've pictured at the right—it fairly represents the entire collection, though there's no two hats in the lot alike—striking models in large and small types, fashioned from Ramie, Chip, Milan and Silk Braids, and lavishly trimmed with Ostrich and Fancy Feathers, Ribbons, Velvet and Flowers.

¶Radical stock readjustment brings about the first "Mark Down" of the season on our high-grade Millinery—the opportunities for savings are remarkable, though limited.

French Roses at Less Than the Cost of Import

An Importer's overstock, in a variety of colors, mostly medium and light pink, shown in clusters of 3 and 5 roses, also in nosegays of 7 and 9 roses with foliage. FAT WOMEN, AHOY! DON'T BE A BANTER

New York Doctor Declares Massage Is Only a Lazy Person's Exercise.

Massage is valuable for many things, but when used in reducing it is simply lazy woman's exercise. It is a substitute for walking, rowing, playing tennis and working—and a substitute is never equal to the real thing.

Turkish baths or any similar sweating process are debilitating.

Tight lacing, the silliest of all reducers, is very harmful. It hinders the circulation, needlessly giving one a red nose, and causes many serious troubles.

The best way to get a good figure is not to think about it. Think about working and walking, sensible hours and sensible food, and the figure will come.—Dr. Mundé Glasgow's advice to women.

Dr. C. W. Moots, a Toledo surgeon, who says a woman ought not be thin, told the Ohio Medical Convention:

"Something is the matter with every thin woman. Every time I see one of them coming into my office, with her sunken face, flat chest and inelastic muscles, I am in doubt whether to feel sorry for the patient or for myself. The reason she is too thin is that something is wrong."

When Dr. Moots's remarks were shown to Dr. Mundé Glasgow, a prominent New York physician, she nodded and said: "Something is very apt to be wrong with the woman who tries to make herself fatty by unnatural and artificial means."

Rantrix, please note.

"A woman should be neither thin nor fat," Dr. Glasgow continued. "If she is in proper health she will be neither plump nor scrawny.

Many With Weak Hearts.

"Think of the very fat and very thin women you know. Are not the former wheezy and asthmatic and frequently troubled with indigestion? If you were a physician you would probably find that they had weak hearts, too, have apoplectic tendencies and are apt to contract contagious diseases.

"On the other hand, the very thin women, at first glance, seem to be much more efficient than their stout friends. They accomplish a great deal more—for a time. But very, very often they are working almost entirely on their nerves, and when the end comes it comes with a crash. They are frequently people of low vitality, with little constitutional resistance. When they are narrow-chested and stoop-shouldered that is a sure sign of pulmonary weakness. Their circulation is poor.

Exceptions Prove Rule.

"Of course there are exceptions. But such only prove the general rule that either extreme means weakness.

"The modern woman nearest to physical perfection is tall and strong, broad-shouldered and deep-chested. She has hips and a waistline, though it isn't an eighteen-inch affair. There's not an ounce of superfluous flesh on her. Her hands and feet are not large, but proportionate to her height. The line from shoulder to hip is not straight like a toothpick nor does it curve sharply like an hour-glass. It is a long, gracious curve. Bones don't show, but they are merely covered, not padded. The muscles are elastic, and the body is held gracefully.

GIRL BATHERS HERE ESCAPE 'BLUE' RULES

Glad They Are Not Under the Eyes of the Stern Chicago Police Chief.

Boston bathing season is opening, and still no McWeeneyism.

Boston bathers may thank their stars, especially the women bathers, that they do not bathe in Chicago. McWeeny is in Chicago.

McWeeny is Chicago's Chief of Police. He decrees that, for women bathers:

"Skirts must be below the knees.

"Sleeveless suits are not to be worn by women.

"Stockings must be worn by girls over sixteen.

"Harem, hobble and directoire skirts are forbidden."

So says McWeeney. Great is McWeeny.

Everybody Is Reasonable.

Boston women and girls have no trouble with the bathing authorities. There are two reasons. The authorities are reasonable. So are the women. The authorities let a woman wear what she wishes in bathing, so long as she is not really immodest.

On the other hand, Boston women have no longing to serve as bathing posters. True, some of the bathers, especially those in the water sporting contests, do swim in one-piece suits that fit them snugly and allow greatest freedom of motion.

But these one-piece suits are made of dark blue. Nor do the swimmers sit around on the sand in them. Chicago women may have worried Chief McWeeny by sporting unimprisoned limbs on the beach, in which their charms were all too open for inspection.

Not so in Boston.

The rules regarding bathing costumes are so simple that they are practically nil.

Suitable Bathing Costume.

Revere and Nantasket beaches are under control of the Metropolitan Park Commission. The rule at Nantasket is that bathing shall be done "in proper costume." At Revere there is no costume regulation.

Elmer E. Binkford, superintendent of the State Bath House at Nantasket, thinks a suitable bathing suit for women includes blouse, bloomers, skirt, stockings and hat. Beyond that the superintendent has not been called upon to judge.

Whidden police think that a woman's or girl's bathing costume should also be "proper." But they didn't care to stipulate what is proper. It might even be all right for a girl to wear a one-piece suit. They were not sure about it. If anyone should "make a holler," as the policeman expressed it, the case would doubtless be investigated.

At Revere Beach there is a rule against a bather loitering on that part of the beach not actually covered by the tide. Nor can a person in bathing costume cross the street along the beach without a written permit from the Park Commission. This is to keep bathers who are not actual beach residents from parading up and down the street in bathing costume. They are simply asked to keep to the actual beach residents of Revere, who dress in their homes, can obtain bathing permits without trouble.

But Boston shows nothing of the McWeeny laws about length of sleeves, wearing of stockings and the like about bobbie skirts.

No girl, the year she becomes sixteen, is compelled to wear stockings in bathing if she does not care to. Most of them do for that matter. The feminine costume at the State Bath House includes hosiery and the bathers put them on.

But there's no McWeeny law about it.

SOMERVILLE WOMAN ROUTS A BURGLAR

Masked Man Surprised While Looting a Residence on Laurel Street.

Mrs. Michael E. Sharp of No. 14 Laurel street, Somerville, surprised a masked burglar in her home yesterday. She made a dash toward the man who threw her husband's watch at her, then fled out the back door and escaped. The burglar secured Mrs. Sharp's handbag containing $3 but, in his search of the house, overlooked $300 which was rolled up in a pair of Mr. Sharp's socks in a bureau drawer.

Laurel street is in the Spring Hill district of Somerville. In this section, as well as the Winter Hill and Union square sections, have been terrorized by a mysterious burglar who has robbed with impunity of late, both by day and by night.

Mrs. Sharp's man in the mask is thought by the police, who are making vigorous effort to locate him, to be the person back of this series of crimes.

Mr. and Mrs. Sharp occupy the first floor flat at No. 14 Laurel street. Mr. Sharp is employed at the American Tube Works, Somerville avenue, Somerville.

Heard Footsteps Overhead.

Yesterday Mrs. Sharp went down cellar to clean the family refrigerator, preparatory to taking leo for the Summer. The sounds made by this cleaning prevented Mrs. Sharp from hearing any other noises till, in a moment of rest, she heard a light footstep overhead. She thought it was some neighbor's child and kept on working.

A few minutes later she went upstairs. As she walked along the hallway she saw the form of a man in the kitchen. He was masked. The mask was of brown leather. It extended from under the front rim of his black derby hat down over his face and neck to the top button of his blue serge coat through two holes in a pair of eyes gleamed at her.

Mrs. Sharp is a woman of courage. She darted toward the intruder. The masked man threw out his hand. Something shot toward Mrs. Sharp with a flash. It skimmed by her head and crashed through a kitchen window. Later Mrs. Sharp found that it was her husband's gold-cased watch.

Overlooked $300.

When the burglar fled Mrs. Sharp ran back into her chamber where the money was. She saw her handbag, with $3, was gone. But the pair of socks with its $300 was intact.

Mrs. Sharp went into the street. She found her handbag in the street, empty.

When Mr. Sharp came home Mrs. Sharp told him. He called the police. Mrs. Sharp described the masked man as about five feet, eleven inches tall, with curley red hair. She weighs about 140 pounds.

George Ham, Formerly a Shoe Manufacturer in Haverhill.

HAVERHILL, May 13.—George Ham, eighty-four years old, who retired from manufacturing shoes eight years ago and started a grocery, committed suicide by gas early today. He had been a sufferer from asthma. He leaves a wife and two sons, James Ham, of this city, and Joseph Ham of Exeter, N. H.

Mrs. Putney 89 Years Old.

Mrs. Caroline F. W. Putney, the oldest native woman of Wakefield, celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday yesterday at her home, No. 108 Lake street. Mrs. Putney has lived for more than fifty years.

SENATOR POWERS AND YOUNG FRIENDS TO GO ON OUTING

SENATOR JAMES F. POWERS

CONGRESS CLUB TO GIVE CHILDREN OUTING

SOUTH BOSTON youngsters are going to have more fun this Summer than they ever dreamed of. The Congress Club is planning great things for them. And tired South Boston mothers are not going to be forgotten. They are going to enjoy, as the club's guests, comforts and pleasures that they have longed for but could not afford.

Senator "Jimmy" Powers, leader of the Congress Club, is the moving spirit of the project.

He and other club officials have been planning for some time to provide a resting place at country or seashore where they could take care of future club members and their mothers and sisters; some place where the women folks could enjoy a rest and the youngsters indulge in the frolics that only richer boys usually enjoy during the Summer.

Senator Powers has just made the announcement that the place has been secured. Where it is he is keeping secret for the present, but promises to make it known in a few days.

The Congress Club has been busy during the Winter gathering funds for the project. Three of its concerts netted nearly $2,000, and from other sources the fund has been increased by the energetic work of the officers and members.

Work for Heads of Families.

"We wanted a spot where we could take the people who have little chance to get a taste of pure air and sunshine," said Senator Powers yesterday. "It is to be a Summer colony with everything provided by the club for the needs of the women and children we take there. A good many people don't know how many tired mothers and ailing children there are who never get a chance to get out in the country, and what a world of good even a short outing does them. That is the kind we are going to take care of."

It may be that spirit that makes Senator Powers known to almost every youngster in South Boston, and to their elders, too. "Jimmie" Powers is the way they speak of him; that, and not his title of Senator, is his chief pride.

The Congress Club, which he organized last October, has already taken an active part in actual welfare work. It is the boast of the members that although the club is young it is a factor in the life of the district.

One of its chief departments is an employment bureau, and during the Winter the heads of thirty families were provided with jobs and eighty women were put in places where they may add to the income of the household.

No Case Overlooked.

Nevertheless, cases of actual need are never overlooked. They are brought to the attention of the Congress Club. Many families have been aided by gifts of food, or clothing, or fuel, or medical attendance, and cash has not been withheld to help some of them over a tight place. At one time during the Winter 287 families were receiving weekly aid, but now, through the use of the employment bureau, the number has been reduced to 47. Last Christmas more than 200 families received dinner baskets filled with all the goodies of the season.

South Boston is looking forward to outings this Summer that will long be remembered by those who are selected for week-end or all-week trips. "We won't overlook anyone," says the Senator, "and we won't make any distinctions or show any favors. Our efforts to provide an institution that has been sorely needed have met with a generous response from those who could contribute and fine results are assured."

Officers of the Club.

President, James F. Powers; treasurer William Dunlap; financial secretary, John O'Connor; recording secretary, William McCluskey; directors, James F. Powers, John H. Giblin, John J. Conaely, Dr. John F. Conmes, Dr. William Sheehan, Joseph Alcardi, Robert J. Wyre, Hugh Mosley, Ira Jacobs; advisory board, Edward L. Logan, James F. Powers, Mrs. McGuirty, Mrs. Frederick Sheehan, James J. Gallivan, John O'Connor, Mrs. Sullivan, John F. Feeney; resident physician, Dr. William F. Sheehan; lecture bureau, Professor Walter Krusi, Professor William H. Dooley, John H. Giblin.

COLLEGE KIPLINGIZED BY WELLESLEY GIRL

A Wellesley College "Freshie" has been listening to the "rushing" of the college preshes. She has met Freshman Year laboratory smells." She has been observing collegiate affairs closely during her Freshman year. Finally she has written a trace of stanzas on the whole thing, parodied after Kipling's "Mandalay."

On the winding path to Westward, leading up to Chiney Hall;
There's a line o' sober lassies, lugin' note-books one and all;
For though the wind is on Lake Waban, an the clangin' gongs they say—
"Don't you cut you Wellesley students, or you won't get your B. A.;
On the road to our B. A.,
Where the lurkin' quizzes play,
Can't get here the cheerin' that does the halls, and die away!

On for Bulging Day they say;
"Bring your money, pay to-day,"
And your work goes all to thunder, for the lines holds forth a play.
Ship me somewhere west of Boston, where the trees grow wooden legs,
Where the shaking of the proctors works like jars on mangy dogs.
For to cancel registration, oh, it's there that I would be,
With a blue slip, which would make me from academe free.

Oh, you don't 'eed nothin' else But three, Laboratory smells,
An' the hangin' over center chimin' in with all the yells
We love the road to our B. A.
Where the lurkin' classmen say:
"If you think you're smart, Wellesley, just you wait until Free Day."

PLEADS WORLD PEACE.

Baron de Constant of Paris to Speak at Harvard May 19.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant of Paris, a distinguished member of the French Senate and president of the French Arbitration Group of the Interparliamentary Union, will give an address Friday afternoon, May 19, upon "American and European Co-operation for World Peace," at Harvard. Baron d'Estournelles is touring the United States. He has spoken in the principal cities in behalf of international justice and fraternity. As one of the French delegates to both the first and second Hague conferences, he rendered conspicuous service. He founded the International Conciliation Association and is now its president.

BABY FATALLY BURNED.

Accident Happens in Motherless Home in Maine.

BINGHAM, Me., May 13.—In the presence of six other children, Marjorie, the four-year-old daughter of Frank Bates of Moscow, was terribly burned to-day and is not expected to live. The children were in charge of the eldest daughter, aged eleven, who has been "keeping house" for her father since the death of her mother, about a year ago. The child was near the kitchen stove and her clothing caught fire. Becoming frightened she ran out of doors, and in a moment all her clothing was burned off.

MUNICIPAL LIGHT PLAN IS FAVORED

As a result of the study which the City Council has been giving to the lighting problem, indications are that the majority of the members will favor a plan of municipal lighting for the smaller streets and alleys of the city, rather than have the work done by contract.

The members of the Council were quietly summoned before the Finance Commission during the past week and while a number refused to commit themselves, the majority opinion of those who responded to the invitation was that the Finance Commission offered the best solution of the problem. This plan calls for the purchase by the city of its own equipment.

At the present time the only bid which has been submitted for doing the work comes from the Rising Sun Company, which has the contract. Under the present contract the city pays $25.00 per lamp for the work. On a new ten-year contract the company offers to do the work for $22.30 per lamp a year. There are about 12,000 lamps to be cared for.

Orchestra Plans Hall.

The Linwood Orchestra, a musical organization of Melrose under the direction of Miss Gertrude Buckley, is to give a dancing party in Knights of Columbus Hall, May 16, to be followed by whist.

REAL TUFTS UPLIFT! 'FIN. COM.' IS COMING

Announcement of the fact was made yesterday afternoon, when it was stated that a finance commission is to be elected before June 1, for the purpose of instituting and carrying on an endowment campaign. The campaign was suggested by President Frederick W. Hamilton, and has been approved by the board of trustees. An attempt will be made to secure large endowments for every branch of the institution.

The commission is to be elected by the executive committee of the trustees, to consist of representatives of the board of trustees, of the faculty and of the alumni. The commission is to inaugurate a movement toward the raising of a million dollar endowment for the Engineering school from some one person, with the understanding the school is to be named after the donor.

HUNGRY MEN WILL EAT FOR A TITLE

World's Championship to Be Decided in Brockton Restaurant for a Prize.

BROCKTON, May 13.—The world's championship eating contest will be held in this place within a few days between Thomas F. Curley of Brockton and Ernest Torrey of Montello, who claims the championship title, on the strength of eating eight boiled dinners in succession a few days ago.

The men were matched at catch weights by Tim Murphy, proprietor of a Brockton restaurant. Mr. Murphy, assisted by several sporting men, has drawn up the following rules for the contest:

The prize will be a year's meal ticket at Murphy's restaurant. Loser will pay for victuals consumed during the contest.

From Clams to Coffee.

The contestants must observe the rules of eating laid down in the Boston AMERICAN'S Book of Etiquette.

The contest shall consist of eating table d'hote dinners from clams to coffee. As soon as one dinner is consumed, another will be commenced. The score will be kept as follows.

Clams, ten points; soup, five points; fish, fifteen points; entre, fifteen points; roast, twenty points; each vegetable, five points; dessert, ten points; coffee, five points.

The man who has the largest total of points wins.

Food spilled upon the clothing, one point deducted for each drop.

Beer and water consumed does not count.

Contestants not allowed to leave the table until the bout is declared finished.

The winner must eat at least one full table d'hote dinner after his opponent has finished or the bout will be declared a draw.

Mr. Curley Is Confident.

Mr. Curley was interviewed after the articles were signed, and said:

"Take it from me, there's nothing to it. I can eat more than any Montello man that ever happened. Way, I have downed some of the best men in the world, and I have never been in training. You may be sure that Mr. Torrey will not make any kind of showing against me."

Mr. Torrey was equally confident of victory.

"That fellow has made a record eating eggs and oysters and lobsters and soft stuff," he said, "but let me tell you that there is nothing like a boiled dinner to take away a man's appetite. You just steer your money on me."

He also has eaten thirteen lobsters and twelve dozen raw oysters.

JAPAN WELCOMES SAILORS.

Cordial Reception to American Naval Officers at Tokio.

TOKIO, May 13.—Rear Admiral Joseph B. Murdock arrived here today and will assume command of the American Asiatic fleet, succeeding Rear Admiral John Hubbard. Formal courtesies will be extended by the government on the occasion of the exchange of command while the American battleships are at Yokohama next week. There will be a series of garden parties and dinners for the visiting officers. The special attention to be shown the visitors is intended, it is thought, as further evidence of Japan's appreciation of the recently concluded American-Japanese commercial treaty.

UNDERWOOD GIVES BIG PLAYGROUND

Henry O. Underwood, junior member of the William Underwood Company, meat packers in Boughton street, has bought three acres or more 120,000 square feet of land at Concord avenue and Cottage street in Belmont from the West End Street Railway, and will give the land to the town for a playground.

PLAN CERTIFICATES OF WIRELESS SKILL

WASHINGTON, May 13.—To bring about greater efficiency of wireless operators on ocean-going vessels, the Department of Commerce and Labor will issue a specific certificate of skill in radio communication to operators who pass examinations, which will be held at many of the United States navy yards within a week or two.

TO HEAR FARMERS ON RECIPROCITY BILL

WASHINGTON, May 13.—All hope of the Senate finance committee concluding this week its hearings on the Canadian reciprocity bill was abandoned today. Scheduled hearings have been arranged for the following week, but the arguments of the objecting farmers' representatives, Col. Chelsea Penrose was planning, when the special session of the committee began today, to extend the hearings for a few days.

WICKERSHAM TO BE YALE SPEAKER

PROVIDENCE OPENS STEAMSHIP EPOCH

First Liner in Mediterranean Service Given Noisy Salute From Thousands.

PROVIDENCE, May 13—The sailing of the Fabre Liner Madonna out of this port today for the Mediterranean marked a new epoch in the commercial development of the city. The Madonna took fifty first cabin and 400 steerage passengers on its maiden trip out of Providence. The liner was the first transatlantic steamship ever to enter Providence harbor. Its sailing is the opening of a service between Providence, the Azores, Lisbon and Marseilles, France.

The big steamship docked at Fox's Point in a bay gaily gowned in bunting people, bands and whistles from harbor craft. Governor Pothier, his staff and a committee of fifty State and city officials were ferried aboard the Madonna by Captain Pierre Declaires, commanding officer of the liner. The steamship was then thrown open to the inspection of the public. Among the officials who took a leading part in the ceremonies in the first yards of the liner were the Italian Vice-Consul, Marianne Severini, and the Portuguese Vice-Consul, Noel Marcaccetti.

Sacrament for 200.

Sunday, June 18, in the Gate of Heaven Church, nearly 200 boys and girls will receive the Sacrament of Confirmation from Bishop Anderson.

No More FalseTeeth

Dr. Estabrooks can, at popular prices replace the lost teeth by the use of his well-known Al-solut system, of dispense with the use of an obdurate plate or old-time crowns or bridges. Don't fail to examine your teeth or make you a set of false teeth—see Dr. Estabrooks' exhibit.

If you have no solid teeth or roots left, the Anchor Denture Plate is the best for you. Unlike the ordinary set of teeth, Dr. Estabrooks' Anchor Denture Plate is rocker. This construction allows you to talk and taste perfectly. It is cool, comfortable, clean and fits better. It never drops, shifts or declines to come where ordinary plates do.

JUDGE REFUSES TO DECIDE GLOVER CASE

Unless a Compromise Is Made Famous Will Fight May Be Tried for Third Time.

Judge John W. Hammond, who presided at the recent jury trial in East Cambridge when an attempt was made to break the will of Clarence F. Glover by four of his distinguished brothers, has declined to decide the controversy on the evidence that was presented to the jury. The jury disagreed. Now, unless there is a compromise, there will be a third trial of the case.

Lawyer Banney, representing Samuel D. Elmore, the executor of the Glover estate, had made a motion asking that Judge Hammond decide the matter. When the attorneys appeared before Judge Hammond in the Boston court house he said to them:

"Gentlemen, I assume that you have not reached a compromise in the Glover will case."

They said they had not.

Then Judge Hammond said:

Evidence Conflicting.

"The issues framed present a simple, narrow question of fact; namely, whether the will was procured by the undue influence of Mrs. Glover. Upon that issue the evidence is conflicting.

"The question is pre-eminently one for the jury, and after listening to the evidence produced at the trial I remain of the opinion that the question should, if practicable, be settled by a jury.

"It is urged in support of the motion that the litigation has been long and expensive and that another jury trial will entail great additional expense; and, further, that public sentiment is such that a fair trial cannot be had.

"I do not think the expense is a sufficient reason for discharging the issue, and I am not yet satisfied that a fair trial by a jury cannot be had and a just verdict rendered.

"The motion is overruled without prejudice to the right of the executor should occasion arise to renew it or make a similar motion."

Two Attempts to Break Will.

Two attempts were made to break the will of Clarence Glover. When the will was filed for probate before Probate Judge McIntire in the East Cambridge Court he decided in favor of the will.

The will gave Mrs. Glover the income of three-fourths of the property, variously estimated to be worth from $30,000 to $50,000, for life, and the rest to Seymour Glover, one of Clarence Glover's five brothers, Seymour, to have the residue of the entire estate after Mrs. Glover's death.

The will was fought by the four Glover brothers who were out of the will. When Judge McIntire decided against them they appealed, and the case went before a jury in the East Cambridge Supreme Court. The jury disagreed.

Should the will be broken Mrs. Glover would get half the estate and $5,000. The brothers would share the rest. Seymour Glover has been opposed to this, although it has been reported that the widow is agreeable.

COL. CODY, KNOWN TO WHOLE WORLD AS BUFFALO BILL

CAMORRA INFORMER TELLS OF LOOTING

VITERBO, May 13—Details of how the loot was taken from the dead body of Gennaro Cuocolo and from the Cuocolo apartments in Naples after Marta Cuttinelli Cuocolo had been stabbed to death were told on the witness stand to-day by Gennaro Abatemaggio, the State's witness, when he was confronted with Enrico Alfano, the head of the Camorra.

As Abatemaggio continued his story, Alfano's face grew dark with rage and he clenched his hands, although he maintained superb control over his passion and there was no outbreak.

In the great steel cage the other Neapolitan prisoners strained their ears to catch the words of the informer. There was a huge crowd of foreigners in court, among them many Americans who had motored from Rome.

Abatemaggio told how the assassins of Cuocolo had rifled his pockets, in order to make it appear that robbery had been the motive.

BUFFALO BILL DROPS IN FOR A FAREWELL

Noted Plainsman, Idol of All Boys, Brings His Indians to Boston.

YEARS ago—long before Pike was a pup—every boy was tormented by a knotty question.

Whether to become a Buffalo Bill and shoot "Injuns" or to be a Robinson Crusoe and have a man Friday.

The boy grew up and he never saw Robinson Crusoe and he never will. There is no Robinson Crusoe.

But there is a Buffalo Bill, the one and only Buffalo Bill. And he's coming to Boston tomorrow.

This is to be Buffalo Bill's farewell. This is his final public appearance. His last appearance in Show Life. He comes here with his famous "Wild West" combined with Pawnee Bill's "Far East."

Pioneer and Fighter.

Buffalo Bill, as most people know, is really Colonel William F. Cody, a man of international fame. He was a pioneer and a participator in the early development of our Western Frontier. He fought and killed Indians. He trapped animals. He cruised the plains, mountains and forests. He led the way for civilization. He was a government scout. He was instrumental in bringing to a close the cruel, bloody wars between the white man and the red. From this country he has traveled all over the world. He has met statesmen, royalty, leaders by right of birth and by right of brains.

Major Gordon W. Lillie (Pawnee Bill) is another examplar of frontier life. Like Buffalo Bill, he is one of a fast vanishing type. He forms a connecting link between the frontier and civilization.

To unite his farewell Buffalo Bill and Major Lillie have united their forces. The "Wild West" of the former is joined with the "Far East" of the latter. This combination forms an anthropologist exhibit that represents the globe.

The combined shows include 100 Indians from our own West, cowboys, ranch girls and such representatives of ranch and prairie life. There are groups of different races representing the storied East, the land of which Kipling and other word-painters have written and sung. There are jugglers from old Hindustan, two herds of trained elephants which play on musical instruments, camel caravans, Persian fire-worshipers, Asiatic acrobats, Russian Cossacks, Japanese Zouaves and other ethnological features.

Some Great Horses.

The combined shows also bring wild Western broncbos, the real "bucking" kind, and the great Texas horse, "Joe Bailey," leading the combined studs of Rhode Royal and Ray Thompson. There are twenty-eight Haute Ecole quadrilles, one of the United States cavalry and artillery, Roman riders, equestriennes, and other daring riders.

The performances of the "Wild West" and the "Far East" will take place twice daily, at 2 and 8 p. m., rain or shine. They will be given at the new grounds, corner of Ipswich and Landsdowne streets, Back Bay.

Spectators will be comfortably seated under shed-canvases, sheltered from rain or shower, yet open to the fresh air. This arrangement is found the most agreeable in summer for patrons.

The first performance will be to-morrow afternoon. There will be no street parades

SPEAKER WALKER URGES INCOME TAX

Both Federal and State Imposts Better Than Present Farcical System, He Says.

Speaker Joseph Walker of the House of Representatives, in an address last night before the Northampton Board of Trade, assailed the present taxation system in Massachusetts as "leading directly to evasion, concealment and down-right injustice." He recommended a State income tax as the best means of providing an equitable tax system.

The Speaker advised the levying of a State income tax even if a federal income tax is levied. He argued that the two taxes together could not amount to anything like the tax now supposed to be levied, but which isn't collected.

Other recommendations were:

Exempt intangible personal property from the general proportional property tax and subject it to a tax on the income which it produces.

After a reasonable tax has been imposed on intangible property, enact "the strictest kind of a doomage law" which would compel holders of such property to show it up.

Of the present taxation system the Speaker said:

"A general proportional property tax assessed and collected locally, was well meant for a farming community where stocks, bonds and other forms of intangible personal property formed a small part of the wealth of the community. But to-day, when this kind of property is generally and commonly held by all citizens without money to invest, the system is impossible to bring directly to invasion, concealment and downright injustice. When the kind of property is found the general tax upon it is excessive, when it is not found it escapes taxation altogether. When it is found it is usually found in the hands of trustees, guardians, executors and servants whose best able to bear the tax escape it.

"The present system of doomage is the merest and the crudest guess work. It leads to favoritism, to secret trades and agreement with assessors. It drives rich men from towns and cities where the taxes are needed, to towns where the taxes are not needed. It leads to great inequality in the distribution of the advantages of civilization among different communities. It tends directly to make rich towns richer and poor towns poorer."

Rev. W. W. Wolcott Dead.

LAWRENCE, May 13.—The Rev. William W. Wolcott, for twenty-six years pastor of the Lawrence Street Congregational Church, is dead. He was prominently identified with many civic reform movements.

OPEN GAMBLING IN RHODE ISLAND

Anti-Vice Bill Is Pigeonholed by Senate Committee and Officials Won't Prosecute Ring.

PROVIDENCE, May 13.—In a pigeonhole of the Senate Judiciary Committee is a bill which would put an end to gambling and other lawlessness in Rhode Island if it became a law, but it is never coming out of that pigeonhole, according to a Senator who knows what he is talking about.

The bill provides for the establishment of a State police force in Rhode Island like that of Massachusetts.

Because of the absence of a State police force an American Monte Carlo is permitted to flourish in North Providence, while gambling dens and dives exist in Cranston, Johnston and East Providence.

The famous Casino at Monte Carlo may be a little more pretentious on the outside than the Casino at North Providence, but for variety of games and play, for the excellence of its cuisine and its wines it has very little on the Rhode Island institution.

Why don't the Providence police put a stop to it?

For the same reason that the French police don't put Monte Carlo out of business. It is outside their jurisdiction.

Run by Gamblers' Ring.

Monte Carlo is in Monaco, a tiny principality in the South of France which has retained its independence chiefly through the influence of the gambling company which has located there and runs the government.

North Providence is a town of less than 4,000 inhabitants, the government of which has been until recently in the hands of a ring of gamblers who operate the Casino there.

In Massachusetts, when the town authorities are lax, down swoop the State police and clean things up. In Rhode Island there is no State police, and the county officials will not act except under extraordinary and absurd arrangements.

A few years ago the gamblers slipped through the State Legislature a clause amending the regulations governing the county officials.

Formerly the sheriff of a county was compelled to act upon the complaint of a taxpayer against any gambling or other improper resort. Now the taxpayer must put up a bond to guarantee the remuneration of the county officials for their troubles and be responsible for any damage suits resulting from action of county officials. This means that if the sheriff or his deputies make a blunder the unfortunate taxpayer must stand the damages.

Nobody's Business Now.

Just as soon as this regulation went into effect the New England Watch and Ward Society discontinued its Providence branch, since it was hopeless to continue the fight against gambling in the face of such a law.

Now it is nobody's business to prevent gambling in Rhode Island, and nobody does.

The Casino at North Providence is an extraordinary structure. It is located on the Woonsocket road less than three miles from the Union Station in Providence at Mineral Spring avenue. It is not pretentious, and is not intended to attract attention to itself. Nobody who did not have explicit directions would ever locate it. But at Mineral Spring avenue one will notice a very high billboard with circus posters on it.

Behind this billboard is a long one-story building, which looks as if it might be a garage or a storehouse. That is the Casino, or clubhouse, or gambling joint.

Looks Like a Fort.

As one approaches it he is impressed by the solidity of it. It looks as if it were built to stand a siege, although it is constructed of wood. There are no windows, but high up near the roof are a line of transoms running all around the building. To look through these transoms one would have to climb a ladder.

The owner of the Casino is reputed to be Michael J. Slattery of Providence. Slattery says he has nothing to do with the resort, but it is known as "Slattery's place."

An AMERICAN reporter and photographer asked several people to direct them to Slattery's, and they pointed out the Casino.

The locality is not exactly aristocratic, and the houses in the vicinity are modest and not frequent. People came to the doors and windows and scowled at the photographer and his camera.

A woman with a baby in her arms yelled from a window:

A couple of hard looking customers slouched along and one of them said:

Newspaper Artist Warned.

"You guys better take the next car back to Providence."

The AMERICAN reporter approached the door of the Casino and rang the electric bell several times. Inside he could hear many voices and a rumbling and rattling that sounded like a roulette wheel in operation.

"Finally the door opened and a ferocious looking person stuck his head out.

"What you you want?"

"I want to see Mr. Slattery."

"Well, he's never here in the afternoon."

Bang went the door.

At McGee's barroom across the street the reporter inquired where Slattery could be found. Half a dozen men at a table consulted and one finally said:

"If you got important business with him you'll find him at No. 82 Custom House street, Providence."

Notice that everybody in the vicinity of the North Providence Casino knew Slattery.

Mr. Slattery Is Found.

On the third floor of the building at No. 82 Custom House street the proprietor located Mr. Slattery. There was no name on the door of the office, which appeared to be vacant, and the door was locked. But the rattling of the knob brought somebody and the door opened.

"Is Mr. Slattery in?"

"Yes, I guess so. Come in."

The office was comfortably furnished and Michael J. Slattery sat at a big desk. He is round faced with a little sandy mustache and a courteous manner.

"Well?" he demanded.

"Are you the owner of the gambling house at North Providence known as Slattery's place?"

"I don't know anything about any gambling place. This is my office and I am in business as a broker. That's all I have to say."

Then the reporter was conducted from the presence and the door bolted after him.

MERIDA'S TREASURES AT BOTTOM OF SEA

NEW YORK, May 13.—Thirty-one fathoms deep, fifty-six miles off the coast of Hatteras, lies the $1,300,000 steamship Merida of the Ward line, cargoed with sixteen tons of bar silver specie to the amount of $1,000,000, the purser's safe, with some $300,000 of passengers, and ship's money, unestimated diamonds and other jewels and all the baggage of 300 odd passengers, not to mention the belongings of the crew.

"With the copper, bar silver, specie, jewels, clothes, cargo and ship, the total loss is supposed to approach $3,380,000.

"Probably none of this can be recovered by diving," said Third Officer H. Middleton of the Merida. "Thirty-one fathoms means 180 feet and I understand that divers could not live in the pressure at that depth.

"Anybody who had had time could have picked up in five minutes a fortune in diamond and ruby rings, necklaces, bracelets, cash—all the valuables passengers lay off when they turn in for the night."

MARKETS TOURED BY THE HEALTH BOARD

BARCLAY CONTINUES IN FEDERAL OFFICE DESPITE GRAFT SCANDAL

Pawtucket Postmaster, Accused of Looting City, Still Draws $3,000 a Year,

WHOLE STATE IS AMAZED

Power of "Bosses" Protects Man Who Helped Lippitt to Reach U. S. Senate.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., May 13.—An amazing story of political corruption and the protection of Republican henchmen by the "men higher up" has been revealed by the trial of James Beach, the "scapegoat" in the Pawtucket stone crusher scandal which has aroused the entire State of Rhode Island to the "nasty mess" which the political bosses of the State have tried in vain to squelch.

Astounding testimony was given at the trial which showed that William H. Barclay, postmaster of Pawtucket, who draws $3,000 a year from the Federal government, had embezzled thousands of dollars from the city of Pawtucket; that post-office inspectors investigated Barclay's record with the result that First Assistant Postmaster General C. P. Grandfield reported that the "investigation discloses that Mr. Barclay defrauded the City of Pawtucket during his administration as commissioner of public works and that he endeavored to frustrate the ends of justice by getting a witness out of the country."

This report was made in December and instant demand was made for Barclay's removal from federal office. But he remains "Why" the people of Rhode Island are asking.

"Delivered the Goods."

The answer comes in the fact that Barclay is the henchman of U. S. Senator Wetmore and was a sturdy stand-by of former U. S. Senator Aldrich and his political machine. It is also found in the fact that Barclay, as the political boss of Pawtucket, controlled nine votes in the General Assembly which were pledged for Henry F. Lippitt in the senatorial contest for Senator Aldrich's seat, and which was the dominant feature that brought about Lippitt's election to the United States Senate.

In the prevalent political vernacular, "Barclay always delivered the goods." No matter how he delivered them he was there with the votes that swung elections. Now that he is openly charged in court with embezzlement from the city of Pawtucket he still retains his $3,000 position as postmaster and Senators Lippitt and Wetmore have successfully prevented his removal by Postmaster General Hitchcock.

When the Beach case came up Barclay fled the State, and although deputy sheriffs sought him night and day he avoided their summonses and avoided testifying at the trial. Even over a week persons on important government business have sought Postmaster Barclay at the Pawtucket post-office but to all the reply is given, "He is away." Newspaper reporters traced Barclay to his magnificent Summer home in Chatham, on Cape Cod, but he disappeared from there two days ago. Yet he is drawing $60 a week as postmaster of Pawtucket.

Filching the City's Cash.

The story of the filching of the city's money, as revealed in the Beach trial, is a tale of political corruption such as never before had been revealed in Rhode Island. Beach took the stand in his own defence. He had been subpoed and humiliated by six months' imprisonment.

Then came the sensational affidavit procured from Beach by ex-Governor James H. Higgins, who has stumped the State, calling Barclay "a thief and a criminal," and dared Barclay to sue him for slander. Barclay did not sue.

Beach testified that Barclay had said he had to have the money to pay the personal taxes of voters. Barclay explained that "the city eventually got the money although not directly."

Beach admitted that he and Barclay spirited Miss Olivina Badard, Beach's private secretary, out of the State when his first trial came on. Barclay, he said, furnished the $200 for Miss Bedard to go to Montreal, where she remained in hiding until the case was closed and the prison bars had closed behind Beach.

The jury in the Beach trial, in which he was charged "with conspiracy with parties unknown to defraud the city of Pawtucket, returned to court Friday night after being out five hours, unable to reach a verdict. The jurors had stood six to six for conviction. It was said after court that the jurors thought that Beach had suffered enough for a crime he committed to help "the men high up."

"Why was not Barclay indicted?" demanded Judge Lee.

"Because the grand jury could not conscientiously have indicted him on the evidence submitted, but if the grand jury had the benefit of the testimony now going in there is no question that Barclay would have been indicted with James Beach," was the reply of Assistant Attorney-General Cross.

Now Let the Hon. Sam Ross Give the Name

He Says a Brother Senator Told Him There Is "Something Doing" on On Railroad Cup Bill.

Sam Ross of New Bedford is one member of the State Senate who has failed to see any reason why the railroads shouldn't be required to provide drinking water and drinking cups for their patrons. One of Sam's associates in the Senate tried to persuade him the other day that he ought to quit his fight. Sam was adamant.

The railroad Senator lost his patience. Said he:

"Ah, for Heaven's sake, Sam, get wise. There's something doing on this bill Come on and get in on it."

That much is known.

If Sam Ross wants to do a service to his State, he might stand up on the floor of the Senate to-morrow and tell the name of the member who made the foregoing remark to him.

HIGGINSON ASHES BURIED.

Simple Services in Family Lot in Mt. Auburn Cemetery.

The ashes of Thomas Westworth Higginson were interred in the family lot of Prospect avenue in the Mt. Auburn Cemetery. The burial service was very simple and was private. Prayers were said by the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Crothers, pastor of the First Parish Church, Harvard Square, who conducted the funeral services yesterday. At the grave were Mrs. Higginson, the widow, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Dellinger Barney, of Boston. Mrs. Barney was a daughter of the late Colonel Higginson.

HARRIMAN STABLE BURNED

Damage at Estate at Arden Reaches $100,000.

ARDEN, N. Y., May 13.—Lightning struck a large workshop on the estate of the late E. H. Harriman, setting a fire which destroyed the shop and a stable. It was reported that a large quantity of gasoline, stored under ground, caught fire and exploded, with painful injury to a laborer named Yeoman, who was fighting the flames.

Both the workshop and the stable were levelled to the ground, at a loss of about $100,000. Mrs. Harriman was in New York at the time of the fire.

TO END POTASH "WAR."

German-American Conference at Work on New Agreement.

HAMBURG, May 13.—The German American potash conference is at work on a new agreement. The preliminary discussions indicate that there is a good chance of a satisfactory settlement being reached. The basis for the negotiations has not been made known, but a German announcement sets forth that the German syndicate reserves the right to sell directly to the American potash importers and binds the Americans to purchase only from the syndicate.

JEW MASSACRE RUMOR.

Report That Many in Kiev Will Be Put to Death To-day.

KIEV, Russia, May 13.—Rumor was in circulation to-day that a general massacre of Jews will take place to-morrow. Many Jews have fled from the city and others have armed themselves for self-defence. The governor issued a proclamation to-day denying knowledge of any uprising against the Jews.

LION KILLLS HIS KEEPER.

Thomas Wilmoth, Third Victim of Kruger, a Man-Eating Beast.

CORTLAND, N. Y., May 13.—Kruger, a man-eating lion which is being exhibited at Homer, near here, added a third victim to his list to-day when he attacked and fatally wounded his keeper, Thomas Wilmoth. Kruger killed a man seven years ago in Chicago and another three years ago at Coney Island.

DR. MOY TAKEN TO JAIL.

Rich Chinaman Accused of Plot to Smuggle in Countrymen.

Dr. Jim Foey Moy of Morristown, N. J., charged with smuggling of Chinamen into the United States, arrived at the South Terminal Station in charge of Deputy United States Marshals Thomas J. BOWLER FORGERIES EXPOSED BY MASTER

Mrs. Reynolds, Friend of Gay Collegian, and Mother, Want $271,000 Notes Paid.

LOOK TO TRUST FUNDS

Big Sums Spent in Merry Life by Former Bohemian at Harvard.

GEORGE PENDLETON BOWLER, the former Harvard collegian and gay Bohemian, who served a Reformatory term for forging the name of his brother, Robert Bowler, to notes given to "Poco" Bennett, the Harvard "old clo'man," also forged his brother's name to notes he gave Mrs. Angelina G. Stevens of New York, according to report filed yesterday in the Supreme Court by James D. Colt, master.

Mrs. Angelina Stevens is the mother of Mrs. George L. (Edith Stevens) Reynolds, of New York and Boston, the young woman who was so solicitous of Bowler's welfare when he was jailed in the "Poco" Bennett case.

Mrs. Stevens is seeking to recover on notes for a total of $271,000 given by Bowler. Of these notes five, amounting to $101,000, were payable to Mrs. Stevens. One for $168,000 was payable to Mrs. Reynolds. There were other small notes.

Woman Is Implicated.

The master finds that a note for $75,000 and another for $5,000, which were not produced in evidence, bore the forged indorsements of Bowler brother Robert The master finds that George P. Bowler committed the forgery, that Mrs. Stevens thought the indorsements were genuine, but that Mrs. Reynolds knew they were false.

At the time of his arrest much mystery attached to a beautiful young woman who became greatly interested in him. She was Mrs. George L. Reynolds. Bowler was already a married man with a young child

Later Mrs. Angelina Stevens, mother of Mrs. Reynolds, applied to the courts for an order against Bowler's trustee to compel them to apply trust funds for Bowler to pay notes amounting to $271,000, which, she claimed, Bowler had made payable to Mrs. Stevens and to Mrs. Reynolds.

Mrs. Stevens's action is directed against George Pendleton Bowler, Robert P. Bowler, his brother, as trustee; Richard W. Hale, guardian and trustee, and the Old Colony Trust Company.

Bowler was the son of George P. Bowler of Cincinnati, who left a large estate. He attended Harvard College and while there spent $40,000. Soon after leaving college he married and there was a child by this marriage when he became acquainted with Edith Stevens Reynolds. Her husband was George L. Reynolds, whom she had married in 1902. Reynolds graduated from Harvard in 1889. Bowler in October, 1904, called at the Reynolds home and was introduced by Reynolds to his wife.

Young Wife Flattered.

The master finds that Bowler began to ingratiate himself with Mrs. Reynolds. He became a frequent caller, sent her many and costly flowers and in other ways did all in his power to deceive and flatter her vanity. He told her of the distinguished family of which he was a member, which was true. He told her Reynolds was beneath her socially and he was very much in love with her.

She was flattered by what he said to her In a month after he was introduced she accompanied him secretly to Providence. In December, Bowler and Mrs. Reynolds went to New York, ostensibly to the Horse Show. They planned obtaining divorces shortly after the trip to Providence. Bowler began to borrow money from Mrs. Reynolds.

The master says: "It did not appear that Mrs. Stevens actually know of any improper relations between her daughter and Bowler prior to their going to New York to live in January. She took no part in the plans whereby they went to New York to live.

"Shortly after the trip to Providence Bowler began to borrow money from Mrs. Reynolds (who obtained it from her mother) and from Mrs. Stevens. In less than two years with the help of Mrs. Reynolds he had obtained the greater part of the Stevens fortune (upward of $175,000).

Family Fortune Gone.

"The money was spent for the most part in reckless extravagance in which both Bowler and Mrs. Reynolds participated in all sorts of gambling and various forms of dissipation, and in part to prevent a suit by Reynolds against Bowler for the alienation of affections and to keep Reynolds 'from causing a scandal.'"

As soon as the money was gone Bowler deserted Mrs. Reynolds, leaving her much in debt for clothing and for money borrowed. Both Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Reynolds were financially ruined.

MRS. DODGE GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

SENTENCE COMES MONDAY

"Worse Troubles Have Come to Me," Says Woman Who Is Convicted.

GILDHALL, Vt., May 13.—Mrs. Florence M Dodge, the well-to-do widow of High Sheriff J. Marshall Dodge of Lunenburg, shot and killed William A. Heath at her home last September, according to a verdict rendered in the court house at this place to-day.

The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, following a two weeks' trial that was enlivened by numerous sensational features. The penalty for this crime in Vermont is anything from a $1,000 fine to imprisonment for life. Sentence was suspended until Monday by Judge Hall at the request of the attorneys for the defence, who said they wished to look over their exceptions.

May Not Appeal.

The lawyers had not decided up to tonight whether or not they would appeal the case. If they have seven exceptions, an unusually small number for so important a case, but they are inclined to think some of them are of much value. It is generally believed that the case will not be appealed. Should Judge Hall give Mrs. Dodge a prison sentence she will be taken to Windsor, where Mary Rogers was hanged. Mrs. Dodge made an extended statement to the Sunday AMERICAN in which she said that she had no complaint to make, but that she is innocent of the crime of which she was convicted. The fascinating widow took the verdict more coolly than her counsel and friends.

Mrs. Dodge's Statements.

Her statement of Mrs. Dodge follows:

I have no complaint to make. I have done everything possible has been done. I know I am innocent. I know my attorneys have not forth their best efforts in my behalf. I have implicit everything to the Lord. And whatever comes to me I shall bear without complaint.

Worst troubles have come to me.

My husband's death hurt me worse than anything that can come now. When he died I thought life would kill me. But through this I have only felt more and more calm as the days proceeded

Thanks for Work of Attorneys.

I want you to say how much I appreciate what my attorneys have done. I know that they have done everything possible. And I want to thank Attorney-General Sargent for the way he examined me. Nothing could have been gentler. He left me less nervous than when he commenced.

I did not dread going on the stand. My attorneys told me before the trial that they thought it would be best, and after the first surprise at the suggestion I was eager to do so. I wanted a chance to tell my story, my own story, just what I knew of Mr. Heath's death, to the twelve men in the jury box. And yet as the time drew near, I dreaded it. I was fairly quivering with nervousness, and yet I dreaded getting up and facing the courtroom. Why could I not have told my story first to the jury and to the judge and attorneys?

Anxious to Tell Whole Story.

But when the time really came it was not bad at all. My attorneys and I had talked over the events of the day Mr. Heath lost his life again and again. So I knew just what were the things that were directly connected with Mr. Heath's death. And when he began to ask me questions it was just as though we were talking over that day again. I forgot about the people in the courtroom and only remembered that I wanted to tell the jury everything that had happened that day.

As I went along I became more and more sure of myself. When Mr. Sargent started to ask me questions I was frightened at first. I couldn't imagine why he was bringing my Relief Corps books into the case. But he was very kind and did not cheat at me. So I recovered my confidence. The fact that I was familiar with the subject helped. It was like seeing old friends to look over them again, and I almost fancied myself back in my home in Lunenburg, adding up my accounts.

But toward the end of the afternoon, after I had been sitting on the stand for a long time, the heat in the courtroom seemed to go to my head. I could hardly see Mr. Sargent, and I could hardly understand his questions. You know done such questions sometimes that are very hard to understand And I was so grateful to him and to Judge Hall when he said we would stop for the night.

"My Conscience Is Clear."

The next morning was not so bad. Mr Sargent said: "Good morning, Mrs. Dodge," before he began to question me, and that made me feel perfectly at my ease

Although convicted, I am innocent. My conscience is clear. I believe in God and he counsels me. I am not the first person to be falsely accused and unjustly convicted. Little do the jury know how they have wronged me. I am glad my husband is not here to feel this sorrow. In my trouble I have found the most loyal friends in the world.

BOY STUDENT IS DROWNED IN POND

Lonesome and Homesick at Ball Game, He Wanders Off and Slips Into Water.

John Suffington, six years old, found it dull watching the bigger boys at the Academy of St. Joseph of the Assumption in Wolcster Hills, play ball when they got through with their classes yesterday

John was only a little chap and he was under a tree and cheered the good plays until he got tired. He was too small to get into the game. He didn't think so but the other boys did. Besides, he was lonesome, for his family is in New York, and being away from home gets prout home sometimes, even if the Fathers and Sisters at the school are kind to little fellows

"It isn't any fun around here," he said dually to a chum. "I'm going down to the pond"

The "pond" is just a name for a pit about fourteen feet wide where earth has been taken out for other work on the grounds. It is filled with about six feet of water

The other boy was watching the game with more interest than John felt in it, and pretty soon it got so exciting that he forgot all about the lonesome little chap When he did remember, he walked down to find him.

John was not in sight and he did not answer when the other boy called. John's chum looked around until he noticed that a part of the bank of the "pond" had slid of into the water Then he saw Johns body on the bottom.

He screamed to the ball players, but his calls were unheard for a time, so interested were they in their game. They finally pulled the little body on to the grass. But it was too late and although the Fathers called a physician, all he could do was to pronounce solemnly that John Suffington had been accidently drowned. The boy's family in New York was notified and how day it is expected that funeral arrangements will be made

BARRIERS OF YARN.

Hurdles to Fly Over and Under at Prescribed Distances.

Obstacle races will be a feature of the Harvard-Boston Aero meet scheduled to take place at the Atlantic Aviation Field, August 26, September 4.

A series of yarn hurdles will be set up along the course, the aviators flying under the first, over the second, and thence along the prescribed distance. The rules stipulated during a conference of the executive board of the meet

Among the Bostonians who will probably fly at th meet are Charles Foster Willard, John M. Gilbas, Earle E. Ovington and James V. Warns.

I've read about his trying to blow up the jail with gas and [illegible] He was trying to make a patent on a pencil and he wanted to make something [illegible] on the end of it, so he tried to tap the gas pipe, and the gas escaped into the room and then exploded. He said 'I have to get [illegible] away, but it has saved my mind, you [illegible] to have something to think about, and if you are digging whenever you get a chance, that gives you something to keep your mind busy'

"My Jesse never was a vicious boy, and I never saw him do an act of cruelty. Of course, I feel for the mothers of those other little children, and I did at the trial. I would gladly have given my own life in order that any one of those little children might have been spared But I do not see what they had to do with my boy, nor why he should have to pay all these years for deeds for which he was not responsible."

Mrs Pomeroy's eyes filled with tears, and she sank back in the corner of the big chair in the parlor of her little North Weymouth cottage, a very frail and feeble little old lady. Two Misters ago she had double pneumonia and she never escaped it this Winter. Her face is drawn pitifully thin, her shoulders are bowed over into a hump like a cripple's, and her breath comes in asthmatic gasps, but when she begins to talk about her boy her eyes flash with the old fire, and the indomitable courage with which she has fought for him puts new energy into her tired body

$9,000,000 SEA TERMINAL PLAN DEMANDED BY ALL BOSTON

Dock Department Could Construct Belt Line Around Its Property Which Would Allow Any Railroad to Enter

All the [illegible] organizations are [illegible] to support the bill of Senator Brown, which [illegible] Standard for harbor improvement and [illegible] an ocean terminal for the Grand [illegible] and any other [illegible] in Boston

The feeling among the members of the Legislature is very favorable toward making a big appropriation to develop Boston harbor, and Mr. Brown's bill with a few unimportant [illegible] is likely to pass both Houses and become a law, and it almost certain to be signed by the Governor

The coming of the Grand Trunk is especially provided for in this bill, which says:

"Any railroad, now or hereafter, entering Boston, shall be given access to the piers by construction of tracks connecting the same."

This means that if the Grand Trunk Railroad should be compelled by railroad traffic to stop some miles away from Boston, waterfront, the State would build railroad tracks connecting with the Grand Trunk lines and giving that road access to the sea.

State Could Build Railroads.

The most important feature of the bill is that clause which outlines the State's [illegible] to build railroads as well as docks. It gives authority to the State to construct a "belt line" railroad, which is advocated by Henry B. Long, without further application to the Legislature

The State could not offer a more cordial invitation to the Grand Trunk than is given by this proposition to build it a terminal and extend tracks to connect with its lines

The Brown bill has the hearty support not only of the Boston Chamber of Commerce but the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and all other organizations interested in the development of Boston

It is [illegible] to be unopposed by the New Haven's [illegible], for it provides for many of the [illegible] recommended by President Mellen in his Chamber of Commerce speech

Senator Brown's bill is a compromise bill and embodies the best features of the Lee measure for the [illegible] and the Chamber of Commerce bill. Both provided for a loan of [illegible] which should be used by the Dock Department work and should be authorized to spend the appropriation as it considers best. It includes a much larger appropriation than either of these bills asked for.

The most inviting prospect is likely to be opened for a new dock [illegible] and a [illegible] for right of excess condemnation of land by eminent domain will be [illegible] into the new Legislature

Belt Line Is Needed.

A belt line railroad is needed in Boston. Chicago has seven St. Louis several and New Orleans a municipal-owned one. A belt line is a railroad running around the city and connecting all railroad lines entering the city, thus enabling the transfer of freight from one road to another or from one terminal to another to be made speedily and cheaply

Mr. Long's plan calls for a railroad fifty-two miles long, extending through Lynn to Hull by way of Woburn, Lexington, the Newtons, Dedham, Braintree and Weymouth

This railroad could be built for $5,000,000," says Mr. Long. "It would pay for itself by my plan of taking a strip of land and a mile wide along its lines by right of eminent domain and disposing of it for factory sites, since the railroad would make this unused land very desirable for such purposes."

Would Pay for Itself.

The land taken could be purchased for $200 per acre and sold for $2,000 in a few years. The total cost of taking the land would not exceed $2,000 an acre. The initial cost of purchasing the land and building the railroad could be paid for by a bond issue.

"At present it takes two weeks and costs $20 to send a freight car from Nahant to Weymouth. By the belt line it would take two hours and cost only $2.

"The entrance of the Grand Trunk would be greatly facilitated by this line for, instead of acquiring a terminal, the Canadian road need only make connections with the State-owned belt line and its cars to the State-owned docks."

Popular Interest in the coming of the Grand Trunk is as great as ever and signatures to the AMERICAN petition asking the road to come are still pending. The AMERICAN is receiving all petitions sent in, although the 100,000 mark has been nearly reached.

Chamber Approves Bill.

Secretary James McKibben of the Chamber of Commerce declares that the Chamber approves and will support the Brown bill.

"The principal difference between this bill and the one which we introduced is that the ... bill called for a board of dock directors, of which the chairman should receive ... salary and the other members ... The Brown bill provides for three directors at high salaries. We have no objection to this form ... the Legislature is willing to ...

"The ... dollars which the bill appropriates for harbor improvements is more than ... asked, but not too much for the needs of the port. This money, if properly expended, would be wonderfully productive of increased commerce and prosperity.

"The Chamber wants this development work managed by big men, men who are capable and far sighted. It is a big job and it requires the greatest talents procurable. That is why this organization is in favor of paying high salaries, you cannot procure such men except in that way."

Endorsed by Produce Men.

The Fruit and Produce Exchange considered the Brown bill so important that a special meeting of the directors was called and the bill endorsed. President Lucius C. Smith informed the AMERICAN of the action of the Exchange, as follows:

In recognition of the necessity of immediate action by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to commence to develop the port of Boston, the Board of Directors of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange on May 13, 1911, unanimously voted to endorse the redraft of House Bill No. 1,112, and urge its enactment as the best means of securing commercial progress. It was further voted that a copy of this action should be sent to His Excellency the Governor; to the Chairman of the Senate and House Committees on Ways and Means and to the members of the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs.

The forward movement proposed by this bill is of vital importance to the industrial and commercial development, not only of metropolitan Boston but also to the entire Commonwealth. Inducements of the most modern dock and terminal facilities must be available to secure the cooperation of steamship companies, manufacturers and real estate interests.

Successful cities, such as New York and Montreal, are building for the future, and already their modern harbor improvements have resulted in additional commerce. The future progress of this port depends upon its present foundations of preparation. Customary indifference means lost opportunities.

We believe the enactment of the redraft of House Bill No. 1,112 will secure at once constructive plans and concentrated authority which will result in placing the port of Boston in the forefront of American centers of trade and prosperity.

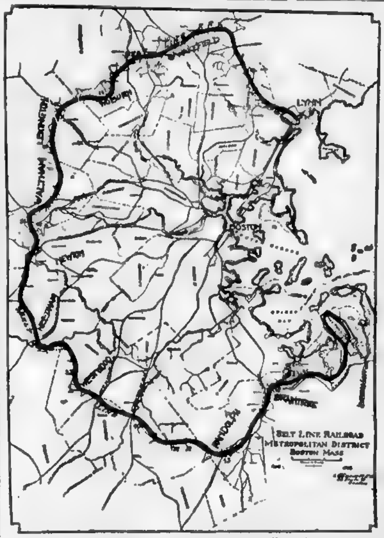
Call for a Hearing.

George B. James, president of the East Boston Company, yesterday proposed that the legislative Committee on Metropolitan Affairs arrange a hearing at which all persons concerned in the development of the harbor can be present and state their views.

Mr. James heartily approves of the Brown bill and declared that it was the best measure yet devised for the improvement of the port. He characterized the proposition of the American Building Trust to take a large part of the South Boston waterfront for industrial sites as absurd, and declared that the State would not part with its waterfront holdings.

President George S. Smith of the Boston Chamber of Commerce yesterday denied the report that the Chamber of Commerce had approved the plans of the American Building Trust, a concern reputed to be financed by European capital which wants to buy the Commonwealth lands in South Boston. He said that he had discussed the matter with representatives of the enterprise but events have not sufficiently crystallized to warrant a statement that the chamber's representatives endorse the project.

"We await developments."



The belt line railroad would begin at Lynn, on the North Shore, and end at Hull, on the South Shore. It would be fifty-two miles long and encircle Boston, connecting every railroad line entering the city and making access to all terminals easy. The cost of building the railroad is estimated at $5,000,000. It would eventually be four tracked, two tracks for freight and two for passengers. It would transport a freight car from Nahant to Weymouth in two hours at a cost of $2. At present it takes as much as two weeks and costs over $20 to send a freight car between those two points. It would cross all railroads at grade, be operated by electricity and be managed by the State of Massachusetts.

OLD PEOPLE PREFER BOSTON AS A HOME

New England's Metropolis Seems to Be Conducive to Longevity.

IN A DAY IN BOSTON.
Sixty persons are born.
Twenty-five couples are married.
Forty persons die.

More people of the age of sixty-five and beyond die in this city than in New York or Chicago. Boston is the Mecca for old people, and in proportion to its population it has more people of the above age than any other city in the United States.

Old people like Boston. When they were young they went West, and, in many cases, made a fortune. But Boston is the place to really enjoy life, and this, in a large degree, accounts for the great number of old people always found in the population of this city.

The number of deaths in this city from the beginning of the year up to May 9 was 4,440. Last year for the same period it was 4,398. The reason for this increase is due to the fact that more old people have died during this period than last year. There has been a decrease in the number of deaths among young people.

Reports by Ministers.

A Unitarian minister of this city recently said in the annual report of his church:

"Of the 125 members of this parish whose funerals I have attended, 27 were between seventy and eighty years of age at their death, 38 between eighty and ninety, and 9 over ninety; that is, three-fourths of them were over seventy years old at the time of their death. This illustrates how the length of life is increasing."

Other ministers in their records of deaths this year testify to the number of deaths among the old people and this accounts for the increased number of deaths, but, in reality, according to the statistics, fewer young people have died in the last five months than ever before.

Dr. Davis, of the Boston Board of Health, in commenting upon the number of old people dying in Boston, said: "It is well known that we have more old people in proportion to our population than either New York or Chicago. Young people go West and leave the old people at home. Then when the young who went West years ago have made a small fortune they generally return to Boston or New England, so that we will always have a large proportion of old people in Boston because of its associations.

Like to Come Back East.

"When people get old out West, they like to return to the scenes of their early life. This is constantly happening. One may say that life is growing longer in this city. More general attention is being paid to hygienic rules and regulations. People are caring more for their health than formerly. The general agitation on the part of boards of health all through this Commonwealth has proved that constant vigilance is the price of liberty.

"Tuberculosis, for instance, is showing a slight decrease, and when you compare the tables of 1880 with those of 1900 you can see that a change is coming in the prevention of this disease. There is no question that the people have it in their power to live longer if they will be attentive to some simple rules of health, and I think that they are heeding these more than ever.

"Anyway, longevity is becoming more pronounced in this city. No one wants to be too dogmatic over it, but there are good indications that the laws of health are being more considered than formerly.

"Infant mortality is on the decrease. While our death rate of all ages was lowest in 1900, we see that life on the average is getting a better percentage than ever before in Boston records."

HOTEL EMPLOYES TO KEEP GENERAL UNION

Resolution to Form Three Organizations Rejected at Close of the Convention.

The Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League Convention defeated a proposition to split their general union into three organizations before final adjournment was taken in Faneuil Hall yesterday afternoon. The resolution provided that one general union be formed for the waiters and waitresses, one for the cooks and another for the bartenders. It only received four favorable votes. Important questions favorably receied will be submitted to a referendum.

Assistance was pledged the union men and women of the affiliated crafts in New York, Newark and Cleveland if a strike is declared in those cities July 1.

All locals were requested to contribute to the defence fund being raised by the A. F. of L., to assure a fair trial for John J. McNamara, accused of complicity in dynamiting the Times building at Los Angeles.

Provisions were made for the compulsory affiliation of all locals with the State and district councils of the organization.

The date of holding future conventions was changed from May to the second Tuesday in June, and Denver was selected as the next convention city in 1913.

The sum of $2,000 was voted to local unions on strike at Spokane, and $1,000 to the striking iron moulders of Hartford, Conn.

The new officers are: Edward Flore of Buffalo, general president; Jere L. Sullivan of Cincinnati, a former Boston man, secretary-treasurer; Robert B. Hespeth of Seattle, first vice president; Frank Hoffman of Minneapolis, second; William H. Foster of Decatur, Ill., third—James H. Anderson of Kansas City, fourth; C. W. McCurdy of Des Moines, fifth; Frank Sesma of Los Angeles, sixth; Charles J. Hackett of Pittsburg, seventh; Miss Elizabeth Maloney of Chicago, eighth.

SUFFRAGISTS FESTIVAL.

New England Association's Annual May Party on May 25.

The twelfth annual May Festival of the New England Women Suffrage Association will be held in the rooms of the Twentieth Century Club at No. 3 Joy street on Thursday evening, May 25, and Miss Alice Stone Blackwell will preside, if her health permits.

The speakers will be Mrs. Maud Wood Park, Mrs. Susan W. Fitzgerald, Miss Elizabeth Upham Yates, president of the Rhode Island W. S. A., Miss Mary N. Chase, the New Hampshire president, and probably Mrs. Katherine Houghton Hepburn, the Connecticut president. Mrs. Mira H. Putnam will read an original poem and it is likely that Mrs. Marion Craig Wentworth will deliver an address.

The social gathering will be at 6 o'clock in the afternoon and supper will be served an hour later. There will be a large attendance. The advance sale of tickets guarantees that.

The day after will come the business meeting of the organization which will be held in the committee room of Park Street Church.

Senator in a Pulpit.

State Senator Melvin H. Nash will speak this morning in All Souls' Church, White street, East Boston, at 10:45. The installation of the pastor, Rev. Alfred E. Wright, will take place next Sunday evening at 7:30.

Small Boy Stands for Rights on Common

Defies Bespectacled Women As Lads of '73 Did British Troops Who Spoiled Frog Pond Slide

The right of the Boston small boy to do whatever he will to Boston Common was reasserted yesterday with some emphasis.

Two youngsters from the West End were chased out of the Common and into Joy street by an elderly woman in curls and spectacles. The older boy, a person of eleven, got away. The other, his junior by two years, decided to stand his ground.

"How dare you! How dare you!" panted the woman. "How dare you play on the grass and pluck flowers? Why can't you behave like American boys? You boys from the West End should be chastised."

"Lady," said the boy, "I'm not scared and you can't scare me. The teacher down to our school told us to get some flowers and study them, so's to be able and write about them. That's why I plucked these dandelions. I've got just as much right on the Common as you have, and I was doing what the teacher told me to do. If you've got any kick coming, drop around to the schoolhouse next Monday, or write to Mayor Fitzgerald."

Whereupon the West End boy stuck half a dozen fingers into his mouth, emitted a whistle as loud and shrill as a locomotive's, and ran to join the friend he had signalled.

"Such insolence!" said the woman. She declined to give her name.

WELLESLEY LAWN RULES.

College Girls Are Obeying Them and the Grass Looks Nice.

Wellesley College girls are really getting careful about college lawns now. They are keeping off them and not throwing empty fudge boxes around on the walks. So the editor of the College News gives them a bit of editorial praise in the current issue, thus:

"We are actually beginning to keep off the grass! We are even requesting each other to remember the seeded ground, and we are depositing waste papers, with pride and a little self-consciousness, in the neat green boxes. The chief thing now to be done is to realize that public opinion means our opinion—that our sense of responsibility and civic pride will be a lasting thing in our college, in the days when nothing more significant, perhaps, than a May Day hoop remains to keep fresh the memory of us as individuals."

LORD DECIES CHEERS WIFE AT BEDSIDE

LONDON, May 13.—Reassuring news continues to come from the sick chamber where Lady Decies (formerly Vivien Gould) is recovering after an operation for appendicitis. The surgeons and attendants are certain Lady Decies will recover rapidly.

At 11 o'clock last night Lord Decies was admitted to the sickroom. Lady Decies, who was recovering from her ether bewilderment, greeted her husband with a faint smile and said:

"Don't worry. I'm getting on all right."

"By George, I never saw anything like the effects of that new treatment, Protone, for the building up of weight and lost nerve force. It acted more like a miracle than a medicine," said a well known gentleman yesterday in speaking of the revolution that had taken place in his condition. "I began to think that there was nothing on earth that could make me fat. I tried tonics, digestives, heavy eating, diets, milk, beer and almost everything else you could think of, but without result. I had been thin for years, and began to think that it was natural for me to be that way. Finally I read about the remarkable successes brought about by the use of Protone, so I decided to try it myself. Well, when I look at myself in the mirror now I think it is somebody else. I have put on just 30 pounds during the last month, and never felt stronger or more 'nervy' in my life."

Any Man or Woman Who Is Thin Can Recover Normal Weight by the Remarkable New Treatment, Protone.

FIVE WORCESTER MEN INJURED IN COLLAPSE

WORCESTER, May 13.—Five men were hurt, one probably fatally, when a section of an old roof of the L. W. Pond foundry that was being replaced by a new one, crashed to the floor at 2:30 this afternoon, catching five of the forty men employed there in the debris.

One man was buried so deeply that it took an hour to dig him out.

The injured are:

Peter Pulski, a helper, whose address is not known. He is expected to die.

Henry Gendron, a moulder of No. 167 Grand street.

The factory is located at the corner of Gold and Assonet streets, in the eastern section of the city and in the heart of the manufacturing section.

AUGUSTA, Me., May 13.—"So far as we have been able to observe, Maine's big game wintered splendidly," said James W. Brackett, chairman of the Commissioners of Inland Fisheries and Game, to-day. "I have been getting reports from all parts of the big game country during the last few weeks, and all the wardens state that the animals they have seen have been as fat and plump as stable-fed cattle."

EYES RED, WOULD BURN AND STING

Grew Constantly Worse. Could Hardly Work Any More. Used Cuticura Remedies, and in Six Weeks She Was Cured.

"It is just a year ago that my sister came over here to us. She had been here only a few weeks when her eyes began to be red, and to burn and sting as if she had sand in them. Then we used all of the home remedies. She washed her eyes with salt water, used hot tea to bathe them with, and bandaged them over night with tea leaves, but all to no purpose. She went to the drug store and got some salve, but she grew constantly worse. She was scarcely able to look in the light. At last she decided to go to a doctor, because she could hardly work any more. The doctor said it was a very severe disease, and she might lose her eyesight. He made her eyes burn and applied electricity to them, and gave her various ointments. In the two and a half or three months that she went to the doctor, we could see very little improvement.

"Then we had read so much how people had been helped by Cuticura that we thought we would try it, and we cannot be thankful enough that we used it. My sister used the Cuticura Pills, bathed only with Cuticura Soap, and at night after washing, she anointed her eyes very gently on the outside with the Cuticura Ointment. In one week, the swelling was entirely gone from the eyes, and after a month, there was no longer any mucus or watering of the eyes. She could already see better, and in six weeks she was cured." Your Vitality Can Be Restored

Strong, vital, healthy manhood fascinates all who come within its influence. As true as you are a living, breathing human being, I can restore your VITAL STRENGTH; there is not a shadow of a doubt as to what I can thus do. BUT there is a single condition, one restriction I put, a certain solemn promise I exact from you before you can exact a promise from me; namely, you must unconditionally agree now at once and forever to discontinue all dissipation; with this out of the way I will do the rest. Remember what I say; no matter what your present condition, no matter what has happened in the past, just forget it and put yourself in my hands; everything will come out as you wish it. I use no drugs, no lotions, no medicines; I place no foolish restrictions upon you; just lead a natural life, get all the enjoyment you possibly can, but cease dissipation; always remember that I can then restore your vital energy; I can take you out of the half-man class and put you in the spot light of full, healthy contented vigor; I can make you feel young again and keep you feeling young to a ripe old age, because I drive into your system the one thing which keeps the whole organism in balance, namely VITALITY. My HEALTH BELT with suspensory attachment is the greatest single self treatment remedy or VITALITY RESTORATIVE that the world has ever known, or probably ever will know. It is worn comfortably about the waist all night and every night for two or three months. Thus while you are sleeping it sends a great, soft, potent, life giving current of VITAL FORCE into your blood, your nerves and your organs. There is not a moment's wait. It helps you immediately, it commences from the first time worn to show you the sunshine of new energy; it takes the kink out of your back in one night; it makes a man of you after you have given up in despair, simply because it supplies you with VITAL POWER—which means health. Just stop to think. You have the same organs, nerves and fibre, the same makeup exactly that healthy, vigorous men possess, the only difference being you are under tone, you need a foundation of NEW VITAL RESERVE, and it is this I give you. There is no reason why you should not be as strong, healthy and vigorous as the best, fullest blooded man of your acquaintance. The matter is easy if you do your part. Never mind about buying a HEALTH BELT as yet, first get in communication with me; read over my book et and if you want to do so tell me your physical ailments that I may advise you, then a little later we can arrange in some way for you to try my HEALTH BELT. But first fill in the coupon and get the book free or call at my office. My HEALTH BELT also cures Rheumatism, Kidney, Liver and Stomach disorders.

Let Me Send You THIS BOOK Free

Fill in the coupon; let me send you at once my free booklet in plain sealed envelope. JUNIUS MORGAN WHO SAID HE WAS DEAD QUITS PARIS

Strange Passage in Marital Life of the Younger Son of Late Lenox Millionaire.

JUST "EFFACED" HIMSELF

Disappeared, Went to France, but Returns with Reconciliation in View.

By VANCE THOMPSON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, May 13.—The Paris friends of Junius Spencer Morgan, son of George Hale Morgan, J. P. Morgan's cousin, who died on April 28 at the family home, Ventfort Hall, near Lenox, hope that his return to New York will lead to a reconciliation with his family.

For some years Junius Morgan lived at Princeton with his wife and family, a daughter aged sixteen and a son aged twelve. His departure from home was wholly unexpected. One day he said to his family:

"You may consider me dead."

In spite of all their protests he persisted in his purpose of disassociation. He arranged that an income from a large portion of his estate should be paid his family as though he were really dead.

"I have kept for myself only King Lear's part," he told his friends. Having settled matters on this basis, he came abroad. Learning that her husband, who wished to be considered dead, was very much alive in Paris, Mrs. Junius Morgan sent her young daughter to school in this city. She hoped that Mr. Morgan would visit his daughter and a reconciliation be effected, but Mr. Morgan called for New York without giving his friends any definite idea of his plans.

None of his friends know how long he intends to remain "dead." Junius is grandnephew of J. Pierpont Morgan.

Junius Spencer Morgan's elder brother, George Dalton Morgan, has also had his family experience. While stopping in Yokohama in 1904 on a trip around the world he married a Japanese wife and, with the exception of a brief visit to New York with Mrs. Yuzi Kato Morgan a year or two ago he has been content to take up his residence in the Oriental city.

Friends of Junius Morgan here have somehow heard that the bulk of George H. Morgan's fortune may go to his elder brother and his Japanese wife and that that there may be some connection between that possibility—perhaps learned of some time ago—and Junius Morgan's essay in self-effacement.

New Ideas in Old Municipalities.

Medill McCormick of Chicago and Frederick Hale, a son of the former Senator from Maine are spending their vacations in a systematic first-hand study of municipal governments in the leading European countries. They spent the last few weeks in France investigating the municipal charters of typical French cities.

To-day Medill McCormick returned from Campiegne, which rich and residential town of 200,000 inhabitants is almost a suburb of Paris. It is a perfectly managed town. The streets are all paved with stone or macadam, well lighted and clean, with municipal hospitals, a college, schools and day nurseries. The entire yearly outlay is $280,000, while the bonded indebtedness of the town is only three times as much. Mr. McCormick said:

"Campiegne is typical of French city administration. There is no waste, no graft. Why? Because there is only one elected body, namely, the City Council. No executive officers are elected. The Council chooses a Mayor from among its members and the Mayor appoints all the municipal officers, including the town clerk, street, police and fire departments. This is the French system and it is a businesslike system. The Council is responsible to the electors and the Mayor is merely the agent of the Council.

"We have exactly the same businesslike thing at home, where the Board of Directors selects a president and hold him responsible. Here the plan works out well in civil affairs. With us the laws so divide the responsibility that a boss and a machine is needed to unite them and make them work together.

"In New York it has got to such a point that the State has created the office of legal advisers to the Governor in case he may not be in sympathy with the Attorney-General, his elected adviser."

Much New Information.

Mr. McCormick believes the subject of municipal administration interests more people than any of the movements now before the American public. All European cities are under the supervision of City Councils elected by the people and who have the full power to appoint their Mayors, chief police and fire departments. This is the French system and it is a businesslike system. The Council is responsible to the electors and the Mayor is merely the agent of the Council.

"From what I have seen this businesslike system of conducting the affairs of a city practically makes graft, bribery and patronage impossible. It is a combination which produces real civil service in a natural way. Coupled with merely a town like all others in France. Would you know how to apply the lesson of the last campaign of the successful party were? Why, simply elect

Messrs. McCormick and Hale left to-day for England, where they will pursue their studies of municipal government. Then they will go to Germany and Switzerland and will finish their tour in the East with complete statistics and a large quantity of hitherto inaccessible literature on the subject.

Consul-General Thackara of Berlin and Mrs. Thackara have begun their annual bicycle campaign which they enjoy chiefly in France. Vice-Consul Caldwell has passed through Paris on his way to Berlin to take his prospective father-in-law's place while the latter goes on his annual bicycle tour. Mr. Caldwell's marriage to Miss Thackara, who is a granddaughter of the late Governor Morton, is expected to take place early in the Fall.

The bicycle cure has become very fashionable in Europe. That old fashioned remedy has been completely rehabilitated. Assistant-Secretary of State Adee of Washington is on his way to join the Thackaras in their life a-wheel and many of the Paris smart set, especially Americans and Englishmen will take the bicycle cure this season, either in the Black Forest or Britain's rockiest.

Berlin Bars Soft Drinks: Summer Tipple Is Beer

Vienna Goes Step Further and Orders That All Liquor Glasses Shall Be Numbered.

By COUNT VON ELPHBERG.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

BERLIN, May 13.—Anticipating a warm season, police are strenuously endeavoring to curtail the sale of all American soft drinks so as to encourage the citizens to quench their thirst with home brewed beer. The brewers are happy at the idea, but young people with a passion for ice cream sods and similar concoctions are demurring.

There is also a crusade against long hatpins, and in nearly all street cars the following signs appear

"It is requested that you protect yourself against projecting hatpins."

German women, however, pay little heed to this evasion to their hat skewers and continue wearing those menacing dangers. Within the last few days several women wearing long hatpins have been arrested. Great interest has been aroused in Berlin by the announcement published in the AMERICAN that Mrs. Olga Samaroff, the American pianist, had married Leopold Stkwall, the manager of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Samaroff's former husband, Boris Loutsky, from whom she secured a divorce some years ago, is a prominent Russian engineer who lives in Berlin. When his wife secured her divorce I was informed by Loutsky that he was still madly in love with her, that he watched her musical career with the greatest interest and read everything published about her in the American and foreign papers.

It is announced that the Berlin Concert Society, of which Joseph Stransky is director, has given the chosen leader for the Philharmonic Orchestra of New York a year's leave of absence so that he may visit America. During Stransky's absence the usual concerts of the society for the next season will not be given, but will again be resumed in 1913.

In order to prevent the spread of consumption and other infectious diseases the Minister of the Interior, Count Knuen Hedervray, has just issued a circular to the Municipal Councils throughout Austria informing them that in future they will see that all glasses in cafes and restaurants are numbered. The authorities believe that by this system the promiscuous exchanging of glasses will be avoided. The order also sets forth that water as well as liquors must be served to customers in numbered glasses. The order goes into force in January, 1912, by which time it is expected all publicans and cafe and restaurant keepers will have stocked their establishments with numbered glasses.

MRS. BRUGUIERE GRIEVED.

Will Sue Society Paper for Alleged Libel.

PARIS, May 14.—Mrs. Pedar Bruguiere, an attractive and much divorced beauty, is highly incensed over a recent publication in a society journal of New York and will enter suit for criminal libel against the publisher. Mrs. Bruguiere's name wasn't mentioned in the article, but she says no loophole was left for mistaking the identification of the woman referred to.

"They have gone too far," said Mrs. Bruguiere to-day, "and I shall put a stop to this persecution. The story recently published was a tissue of lies, and I will ask the law to go as far as it can to protect a woman from such attacks. My New York lawyers will enter suit immediately and push it with vigor."

Then Mrs. Bruguiere talked of her matrimonial intentions which were referred to in the article in question. Her exact words were:

"Nothing is further from my purpose than that of again launching on the turbulent sea of matrimony. . . . I have had the pleasures of freedom before taking on another yoke."

REGENT A GREAT SMOKER.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

MUNICH, May 13.—The Prince Regent explained the other day to a schoolmaster's lecture who begged him to attend one of her performances why he goes so little to the theatre.

"I am an endless chain smoker," he said, "and can't bring myself to sit for hours without a cigar or pipe."

This ninety-year-old man smokes from twenty to twenty-four cigars or pipes per day, that is between the hours of 5:30 a. m. and 11 p. m. He takes a good bath every morning and lights his first pipe the moment he has breakfast.

HEBREW TO RULE EGYPT.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 13.—The Jewish Chronicle states that it is rumored that Sir Herbert Nathan, Secretary of the Post-office, will succeed Sir Eldon Cerst as British Resident in Egypt.

Should the rumor prove correct, says the journal, it will be the second time in history, after a lapse of some 4,000 years, that a Jew would take a prominent part in the government of Egypt. Sir Matthew Nathan was formerly Governor of Natal.

ACROSS INDIA A-WHEEL.

Cyclists Complete Trip from Calcutta to Bombay.

BOMBAY, May 13.—Henry Moore of Liverpool, and Harry Crane of Nottingham, have arrived here after a cycling tour across India from Calcutta. They had previously spent a couple of years in the Australian bush, which prepared them for the journey.

They left Calcutta in December, carrying an equipment weighing sixty pounds, which comprised a bicycle tent, rugs, a small stove and cooking utensils, spare clothing, tinned food and a six-shot Winchester carbine.

They purchased flour, rice, eggs and other food in the villages, baked cakes as occasion arose, and thus procured meals on the road.

PEERS GET DOWN TO A HOUSE CLEANING

COMPROMISE SPIRIT ACTIVE

At Eleventh Hour Contending Political Parties Seek Basis of Agreement.

By WILLIAM T. STEAD.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 13.—At the eleventh hour and after almost all hope of compromise had been abandoned, it seems possible that the Constitutionist crisis in England will be composed by agreement between the two parties. Of course, there is no outward and visible sign of this at present, and the possibility will be stoutly denied, even by those who are preparing themselves to accept it.

As, however, the American public is only concerned with great results, it may be well to put on record at this early period that many shrewd observers in this country are coming to the conclusion that settlement by arrangement is in sight.

The Parliament bill will be passed through without wavering. It will be sent up to the House of Lords backed by the whole force of the coalition in the House of Commons. The Lords will be told that they must swallow the leek or face the consequences. When the bill reaches the House of Lords the Peers will probably adjourn its consideration until they have made some progress with their own reform bill.

The doors are open for this manoeuvre by the preamble, which, much to the disgust of the Labor and Radical section of the Liberals, has been retained in the forefront of the veto bill. This preamble is a public pledge for the reform of the House of Lords at some time in some manner not yet specified.

The tactics of Lord Lansdowne seem to suggest that the reform bill which he introduced this week into the House of Lords will be taken into consideration together with the veto bill and that out of the two some kind of a joint settlement will be arrived at.

The Peers' Scheme of Reform.

It may be worth while to consider the elements which are now ready to be cast into the crucible to be smelted with the aid of a flux of compromise into a national settlement of the question. Lansdowne's bill, as he frankly admitted, is a death blow to the old House of Lords. In place of an assembly based almost solely upon heredity he substitutes a new House, of which only a hundred Peers will represent the hereditary principle.

The seven hundred existing Peers will be called upon to elect, by a system of proportional representation, one-seventh of their whole number. Only such Peers will be eligible who belong to certain specified categories of men who have done service to the State. The rest of the House of Lords he proposes to constitute first by one hundred and twenty Lords of Parliament elected for electoral districts by electoral colleges, composed of members of the House of Commons returned for constituencies within that district.

To these are added one hundred Lords nominated "by the King, that is to say, by the Prime Minister for the time being, in proportion to the strength of the parties in the House of Commons. The members of the new House of Lords will sit for twelve years, one-fourth retiring every third year. To these elective Lords there are added seven Archbishops and Bishops, and sixteen law-Lords.

There is no doubt this is a sweeping and radical reform which may well be termed revolutionary. It is the first large scheme of the second chamber that has ever been produced which does give the Liberals a chance of permanently the majority in the House of Lords. That, however, is not the material point at issue. If the two Houses differ, as they probably would differ if they were constituted according to Lord Lansdowne's plans, how is the difference to be settled?

The Joint Question Solvent.

It is understood that Lansdowne favors a settlement by the method of joint sessions; that is to say, the Lords and Commons meet together in one room and the majority decide. In most cases they would advocate an appeal to the referendum. If the Unionist leaders are prepared to accept this principle of joint sessions then indeed settlement is in sight, which is much more satisfactory than the veto bill with its preamble, foreshadowing reform of the House of Lords at some remote period. It is early in the day to forecast the lines of this compromise, but there are certain modifications which will have to be made. In the first place the right of the House of Commons to abolish the hereditary chamber altogether will have to be conceded.

In the second place, Lansdowne's proposal that the King should never be allowed to create new peers will also have to be modified. Creation of Peers to any one year will have to be eliminated.

Granting these two modifications it ought not to be impossible to arrive at a settlement on the basis of a reference to joint sessions in cases of differences between the two Houses. Such a settlement, if accepted by the Government of the two Houses voting together to carry the Veto Rule by a majority which would not be less than sixty.

Nicaragua to Get American Gold to Pay Off Foreign Debts.

SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, May 13.—The newly elected Constituent Assembly has given authorization to President Estrada to contract an American loan. The proposed loan, which will amount to between $12,000,000 and $20,000,000, will be used for the purpose of refunding the international and foreign debts, building railroads to Matagalpa and Rama and establishing a gold standard.

ELIZABETH'S LOVE RING IS TO BE SOLD

Jewel Which Was to Have Saved Earl of Essex's Life Go to Highest Bidder

FAMOUS GEM AT AUCTION

Curious History of Token That Had Such a Share in Monarch's Tragic End.

By OSBORNE WHITE.

Special Correspondent of the American.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 13.—The ring which Queen Elizabeth gave to the Earl of Essex telling him that if he ever got into trouble he was to send it to her, but which was not delivered to her until long after his death in the Tower of London, is to be sold at auction at Christie's on May 19. Everyone has read the story of Queen Elizabeth's infatuation for the Earl of Essex as it is related by Sir Dudley Carleton, afterward Lord Dorchester, when he was English Ambassador to Holland. Queen Elizabeth gave the Earl of Essex this ring, ordering him to keep it, and saying to him that whatever crime he should commit the world pardon him when he returned that pledge.

Those were troublous days. Soon the Earl, like many another courtier of the Virgin Queen, found himself locked up in the Tower. The Queen, exasperated by the apparent contempt with which he treated her affection, took no steps for his release. The Earl's enemies, of whom he had many, took good care to bring to her ears the story that he had said her being was "as cooked as her body."

The Earl, finding himself in the last extremity, applied to the Countess of Nottingham, and entrusted the ring to her, with the injunction that she should see that it was delivered into the Queen's own hands. But her husband, who was one of the Earl's bitterest enemies, prevented the Countess from giving the ring to the Queen. Elizabeth, indignant because of the Earl's failure to take advantage of her offer, permitted the Earl to be executed.

Some time afterwards the Countess of Nottingham, being ill and about to die, implored the Queen to come to her bedside, and thereupon confessed to her the affair of the ring. The story, as related by Sir Dudley Carleton, continues:

"The astounded Queen burst into a furious passion. Shaking the dying Countess in her bed, she cried out vehemently that God might pardon her, but she never could. The Queen flung herself out of the chamber overwhelmed with the utmost grief. She sighed continually for a fortnight, without taking any nourishment, lying in bed entirely dressed, and getting up a hundred times a night. At last she died of hunger and grief, because she had consented to the death of a sweetheart who had appealed to her for mercy."

The ring, the failure to receive which, according to this historian, caused Queen Elizabeth's death, has been handed down from Devereaux to Carteret, and from Carteret to Lansdowne, until now it has found its way to Christie's.

HOME FOR OLD HORSES.

South Africa War Heroes Among Lady Churchill's Pensioners.

LONDON, May 13.—Lady Edward Spencer Churchill has opened, at the Home of Rest for Worn-Out Horses at Cricklewood, recently, some new stables containing twelve loose boxes erected at a cost of £3,000 to provide the inmates of the home (number now 94) by the end of July, the permanent pensioners are very old horses, notably Mr. Lawrence's bascon and a pony named Neddy, rescued from starvation in Ireland by the Home in 1889 (he is the oldest inmate).

Several old war horses, among them Brandy, who was in a good many Balkan battles of the last South African war, including the relief of Kimberley, are included in the list of pensioners.

Lady Maidstone a 'New Helen' Gains 'Prettiest Peeress' Prize

Duchess Wins Point at Court

Duchess of Marlborough, who now "may" attend the Coronation as she claims privilege.

Her Grace of Marlborough May Attend Coronation if She Desires.

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 13.—In these gentes nation days it is astonishing to note the really extensive and serious attention that is given by the English press and the people to the visit American readers, residents and visiting, are expected to take in an affair so peculiarly British.

For instance a correspondent in inquiring as to who may be acclaimed the loveliest and most popular of the richest American Peeress—something after the fashion of the old time game of Sortfolio. In the matter of beauty the award seems strongly trending towards the Misses Curtis-Brown and Nottingham, her husband being heir to that historic gentleman.

It is recalled that in her early girlhood John K. Sargent, the painter, pronounced her and her brother, Armstrong, two of the handsomest children he had ever seen, and it is noted that in her maturity as an artist he also was when Sargent paid her that compliment.

As a matter of fact "maturity" is only a term applied by Maidstone in quite his early twenties and a glimpse of her in Bond street awakens the belief that she will rank high with the historical beauties of London.

What discussion is made over the recent report that the Duchess of Marlborough was offered the honor of leading the royal procession, by virtue of a hereditary right, and declined on the ground that age would detract from the picturesqueness of the scene. This is not to be taken seriously, however, and it is understood that she would decline such an honor, even though it were offered, as she is not quite so short in stature to carry the part with dignity. It is further learned that their Majesties wish it to be understood they have no personal feeling against the Duchess of Marlborough, and that at the time of the coronation, in view of a posteriority which preceded the Marlborough separation as an American, and not as a Peeress separated from her husband should be "commanded" to take part in the ceremonies.

Loopholes have been found however through which the Duchess may, if she desires, enter Westminster on Coronation Day. It has been decided "that it shall be no refusal by the Court to permit any Peeress entitled, privileged or by birth to be present."

This is the exact language of the official royal decree. Hence it can be predicted that the Duchess while no summons has been or will be issued to the Duchess of Marlborough to attend the coronation ceremonies, will be able to insist upon her rights, take her place with its regulated Peeresses and sing her "God save" with the rest of them.

Keen observers of the Duchess' character predict that she will not take advantage of this loophole. They call attention to her absence at this week's Court function and point out that she is devoting her time and energy to charitable and literary work which is winning her golden opinions.

J. P. MORGAN IS LOST IN NIGHT MOTOR TRIP OVER THE ALPS

...Alps Pass Set Up Waiting for Millionaire's Return.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

AIX-LES-BAINS, May 13.—The phenomenal Alpine record has had a veritable sensation ... Pierpont Morgan ... the Alps and its 8,000 inhabitants and 4,000 visitors were in much consternation till dawn.

Mr. Morgan, who has been greatly invigorated ... sulphur baths of Aix, was invited by a fellow sojourner to take a mountain run in a big ... automobile, and though the shades of eve were fading fast over the pretty little town, he consented as it did fair to be a clear night.

The enormous bouquet presented to the banking king was tied with a tri-color of ribbon and bore the inscription: "From the town of Aix-les-Bains to J. Pierpont Morgan." The compliment was deserved, for Aix is indebted to Mr. Morgan for a ... boulevard and for a most valuable ... hotel. Both, it is understood ... there are more Morgan favors for it.

Were I living at Versailles I should say good by to the ministers of that royal town to present Miss Anna Morgan with a bouquet. For she is as faithful to it as her father to Aix.

Rivalry in Golf Clubs.

When Atlantic Parts there was a charming rivalry going on between our two great golf clubs, both of which are nominally French, but each containing a dominating American element. The elder of the clubs is near the artistic town of Fontainebleau so full of Napoleonic memories. While the former has a Russian Grand Duke as its honorary head, the latter has a committee made up of French and American nobility and particularly of French nobles, who are American through their wives.

For instance Henry Cleveland, Henry Ridgway, Harrick Riggs, and W. K. Vanderbilt, on the committee of the La Boulie club are associated by the Marquis de Casa, residents and visiting, are expected to take in an affair so peculiarly British.

Work on Jewish Ruins Will Be Resumed August 1.

LONDON, May 13.—Captain Montagu Parker, a brother of the Earl of Morley, who headed a party of British explorers on Jerusalem, who has been charged with despoiling the Mosque of Omar and converting away sacred relics hidden from the Romans, has returned to England and gives an account of the excavations. He says: "Unfortunately, although the work from a scientific viewpoint was of extraordinary interest, we were unable to discover any Hebrew writing. But we found definitely the spot where the city of David and the Jebusite city which preceded it had existed. The latter, from the pottery we discovered, undoubtedly was in existence 2,000 years before David captured the city." Operations will be resumed ...

I don't care a thing about my own life. I'm an old woman now and my life is almost over anyway, but if before I go I could only do something to help my boy, then I should die happy and all the years of suffering would be made up for."

HOW THE RADCLIFFE GIRL WILL APPEAR AT COMMENCEMENT

MERCY! RADCLIFFE BAN ON BARRETTES!

Seniors Greatly Disturbed Over New Ruling for Commencement Day.

THERE'S going to be a "barretteless" Commencement at Radcliffe College this year and the girls can't figure it out.

The girls can't see the idea of making the dress as plainly as possible for Commencement and then forbidding barrettes. Barrettes, as some men may not know, are ... pins of shell or metal ... the girls wear in their back hair just at the nape of the neck to confine the ... locks ... stray out in such a ... matter.

After a girl has fixed her back hair as ... as she can, there are always a few ... at the back of the neck which will persist in wandering around in a most ... fashion. To confine these wilful ... the girl puts on a barrette, which ... locks into its clasp and ... them there.

The latest ... on Commencement Day ... at Radcliffe is "No barrettes." Miss Mary B. Reed, marshal of the senior class has posted the rules. She is backed by Miss Coes, dean of the college.

The seniors are disgusted.

"It's beyond endurance," they say. "We ... wear barrettes. How ... the marshal an' the dean ... we're going to fix our back hair."

At Commencement the seniors will all look ... as far as dress can make them. Whether they are tall or short, lean or ... dark or fair, they will wear the ... Commencement costume, prescribed as follows:

"A plain tailored shirtwaist with long sleeves.

"Academic gown two inches above the bottom of the skirt.

"Small white bow tie.

"White belt with either no buckle, or ... pearl ...

"Black oxford shoes and black stockings.

"No jewelry. No flowers.

"No ornaments on the hair, as ribbons, bows, etc.

"No fancy hatpins in the cap.

"Comb under the cap, and no BARRETTES."

At commencement exercises, if a girl seems uneasy about her back hair, don't blame the girl. She is simply wondering if her love locks are getting unruly in the absence of the usually restraining barrette.

DALY INDUSTRIAL CLUB MAY PARTY

Second Annual Fete of Dorchester Association Held in Bloomfield Hall.

The second annual May party of the Daly Industrial Club took place on Friday evening in Bloomfield Hall, Geneva avenue, Dorchester. Following the practice of former years the members had a number of features that proved very interesting. The hall was decorated and the committee in charge of the electrical effects displayed many novelties.

The club was formed by the members of the Urbane Pleasure Club of Neponset, to aid the Daly Industrial School, a home for orphan girls on Train street, Dorchester, and the entire proceeds of the party was turned over to the institution.

The club is composed of many well known young ladies and gentlemen from Roxbury, South Boston, Jamaica Plain, Charlestown, Quincy and Chelsea. The officers of the dance were Henry Glynn, floor director; Miss Emma Crowley, assistant floor director; Miss Alice McGonagle, assistant floor director, and John McCarthy, chief of aids, assisted by the following aids:

SAY MILKMEN TAKE CREAM OFF SLEEP

Kind Natures of Brookline's Best Citizens Curdles With Wrath at Disturbers

Oh, I slept like a top while a yegg and a cop
Swapped shots 'neath my window-sill out on the lawn,
And I slumbered quite fast through a dynamite blast
Which shattered some neighborhood ledges at dawn.

When I traveled the deep I could soulfully sleep
While the sirens wailed shrilly ten feet from my head,
And they say in a wreck once I lit on my neck
And calmly slept on while they thought I was dead.

I was proof against din. All the rockets of sin
Could not break up my sleep nor endanger my dream,
But they've got me at last. I am daily harassed
By men who deliver the milk and the cream.

Now we know who woke the Sleeping Beauty. It wasn't the prince. It was the palace milkman.

The fairy tale was always told us that the handsome prince stole in and aroused the beautiful princess by smacking her right on the ruby lips. It was a pretty fair. The princess awakened. All the sleeping palace came to life.

But modern research shows that the milkman beat the prince to it, so far as waking the princess goes.

No Rubber Tires.

All was still in the palace. The princess, the cook, the janitor, the maid and the people in the next flat had been sleeping for a century.

Along came the milkman. It was all off with the spell. The milkman clattered down the pavement in his horseless milk wagon. The tires clanged loudly on the brick pavement.

Bolting down from his seat in his No 10 boots, with hobnailed in, La soles, the milkman dragged a few dozen cans of milk out the back of the wagon and banged them down on the brick. Then he slung a dozen more cans down from the front basket and stamped along up the back stairs.

By this time the whole palace was awakening. The human didn't get any further than the kitchen door, while the princess was stirring, the best room on the third floor front. But the princess was aware of it right off. She heard the cans and said:

"Hark! that must be a wagon. I wish he wouldn't make such a racket. How am I going to be loved by the prince kissing me awake if the milkman won't let me sleep. Fiddle dee, I'll speak to him."

What came out of mere prince, without any sense of humor or admiring wagon, have been a milkman? That fairy tale is spoiled right there.

It was a long time ago, anyhow. But people have been joking about the milkman's noise ever since.

The latest is an animal the milkman pastures either come from Brooklyn and from Milton. It's the same old kick. Those people who want milkmen to let them sleep.

Some day a genius will invent a silent milkman who will creep in softly, set down his jars of milk and cream without making a sound and gently steal the empty ones. Then the only excuse of his presence will be the bottle he left behind. The inventor who produces this blessing will make his everlasting fortune. Every family will get a silent milkman.

Why Noisy Milkmen?

Some Brookline citizens are asking why the milkmen can't use rubber tires on their wagons and make less racket when they come upstairs with their bottles.

A Winthrop citizen comes to bat with this yelp:

I moved to Winthrop last week. I am awakened every morning at five o'clock by the milkmen calling from one house to another. The earlier it is the louder they call. There is one block with a deep voice that would wake up 20 yards away. He ought not to be a milkman. There's a job waiting for him as a fish announcer.

Take any suburban home. Man and wife have just arisen. Wife says:

"John, I wonder if the milkman has come. See if the milk is at the back door."

Husband says, It's there, I heard him."

No person needs to look at the back door to see if the milk has been delivered. If the milkman has been around you know it, unless you are deaf.

Question: Why do most milkmen have heavy, bass voices?

Also: Why does the milkman want to talk to the janitor so much?

BOSTON WIDOW IN NEW ROMANCE

NOW BRIDE OF RICH NEW YORKER

MRS. J. ELLSWORTH DE KAY, LATE OF BOSTON

MRS. MARGARET McLEOD BUTLER, a brilliant young widow of Boston and Rutland, is the bride now of James Ellsworth DeKay, a wealthy New Yorker, who was an unsuccessful suitor for her hand before her first marriage. Mr. DeKay is a friend of C. D. Gibson, the artist, and posed for Gibson men pictures.

After the death of her first husband, the late Dr. D. P. Butler of the Rutland Sanitarium for Consumptives, Mrs. Butler went to New York in an effort, by devotion to social settlement work, to forget her sorrows. DeKay found her, wooed her again and won her.

Mrs. Margaret McLeod Butler DeKay is the daughter of the late James I. McLeod, formerly of Bath, Me., and later of Bridgewater, Mass. She was born in Bath, where she went to school with her four sisters and two brothers.

Seven years ago the McLeod family moved from Bath to Bridgewater, Margaret McLeod was then a little over twenty years old. She was a beautiful girl and possessed a faculty for business remarkable in a girl.

She became a diamond saleswoman. She entered the employ of a jewelry firm in Temple Place, Boston, where she became one of their most valued agents.

Among the men who met Miss McLeod at this time was "Jimmie" Ellsworth DeKay, scion of an old Knickerbocker family, member of the Union, University and other exclusive clubs and man of the world generally. DeKay's people had a Summer place on the South Shore.

"Jimmie" DeKay became so attentive to Miss McLeod as the latter would permit. Some of Miss McLeod's relatives and friends thought that she would become Mrs. DeKay.

Whether there was a lovers' quarrel or not is not known. But the next Miss McLeod's friends knew she was engaged to Dr. D. P. Butler of Rutland Sanitarium. They were married in November, 1908. Dr. Butler died on October 14 last. Mrs. Butler went to New York and engaged in settlement work as Greenwich House.

There "Jimmie" DeKay found her. He renewed his suit and succeeded. He married Mrs. Butler at the Church of the Incarnation, New York on last May 6. The wedding was performed by the Rev. William N. Crewshaw.

He and Mrs. DeKay will settle at the DeKay country estate at Babylon, L. I.

RINGLING PARADE TO BE GREAT PAGEANT

The street parade which the Ringling Brothers' Circus will give in Boston on Monday, May 20, will be the greatest pageant of its kind ever presented in this city, the management of the big show announces. The circus will open a one-week engagement here on that date.

There will be 1,250 men, horses and children in the parade, with 680 horses in silver-mounted harness, 108 cages bearing wild animals from the jungles, forty elephants, a twenty-camel team and many other novelties.

There are 300 performers with the Ringling Brothers' show this season. Among them are Ernest Clark, whose act is described as "a thrilling, dare-devil flight through space in which he turns as he descends to a trapeze a triple somersault." At every performance will appear Alfred Loyal and his equestrian dog "Togo." This dog is from Germany and of him it is said: "He rides with the grace of a schooled equestrian, posing on his hind legs and catching knives in his mouth." Professor Emery's herd of baby elephants play a game of baseball. This act is very amusing as well as remarkable. Other European artists with the circus are Miguez, a Spanish wire walker, the Pistolesi family from England, the Georgi family from Berlin, Schumann educated horses from Berlin, the Rossellis, a family of Italian acrobats, the Cottrell-Powell family, who are European riders; the Ioleo troupe of aerial bar performers, who are great favorites in Paris; Daisy Hodgini and her company of somersaulting riders; Russian acrobats, known as the Alex Family; Professor Antonelli's trained horses from Paris, the famous Taxinetter horses from Paris, the famous Davis family and a troupe of sixty auto stunts.

"The Ringling Circus is bigger than ever before and is said to have more cages than any show which ever took the road.

MONTREAL TRIP FOR BOSTON REALTY MEN

Will Urge Grand Trunk to Come Here and Will Inspect City's Big Docks.

The Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange will give a trip to Montreal for Boston business men on a special train leaving the Grand Trunk station at Boston one of the next days in June. The railroad is one purpose of the trip, in addition the Exchange has in mind a twofold aim of bringing the commercial abilities of Montreal and Boston into closer touch and of bringing the two cities closer together in the matter of transportation facilities.

It is understood that the officers of the Exchange with regard to the coming of the Grand Trunk to Boston are going to be the real leaders in carrying the affair to a decision for this part of the work of the Boston Middle-men is one of many thousands of dollars which the Grand Trunk has to spend in Boston before actual work can be started.

Also, in view of legislation now pending regarding the development of Hudson Bay, the second purpose of the Exchange in desiring to study at first hand Montreal's dock system is fully understood.

The party leaves Boston on a special Pullman train at 9 o'clock June 5 in the morning. June 6 arrives in Montreal at 10 o'clock the same forenoon. While there the visitors will be the guests of the Montreal Board of Trade and will be received at the train by a committee of members of the Montreal organization. On the day of their arrival the Boston party will be entertained at a banquet at the Ritz Carlton.

Wednesday, the Bostonians will embark on a tour of inspection through Montreal's commercial interests. Later will be taken to the harbor, as the guests of the Montreal Dock Commission. The party will leave Montreal Wednesday night.

In the party will be many of the best known men in Massachusetts. Governor Foss will be going provided he can arrange his political affairs so that he can be absent. The governors of the New England States have been invited to take the trip. Governor Draper, chairman of the Harbor and Land commission; Frederick P. Stearns, treasurer; Mayor Fitzgerald and Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Mayor John F. Bowlan of Lowell are others who will be prominent in the party.

President John J. Martin of the Exchange has been in Montreal completing the arrangements for the trip.

The committee of arrangements for the trip follows:

Hon. E. P. Shaw, chairman; Hon. J. Q. A. Brackett, Robert Luce, William H. Hill, Henry Siegel, William B. Lawrence, Frederick O. Bartlett, W. N. Haby, George W. WEAR SIMPLE FLOWERS.

Buttonhole Bouquets Now Within Reach of Multitude.

LONDON, May 13.—As the result of its being considered unfashionable to wear anything but the simplest flowers in the buttonhole, the delicate blossoms from the hothouse, are being eclipsed by those from the border (such less showy flowers from the garden. It is strange that while fashion changes so rapidly, no one in the ideas' garments are more gorgeous and brilliantly colored than usual. Perhaps the greatest development effected by the fashion of fashion Bond street florists of those of the West End are experiencing an unprecedented demand for daisies, lilies, cornflower, marguerite, etc., while the exotic hothouse blooms are relinquishing to the shelves. Instead of paying a fabulous price for a buttonhole one can now purchase a fashionable nosegay for a quarter

3,000 Mile Race for Husband Mrs. Hall Pursuing an Actress

PRINCIPALS IN BLIGHTED ROMANCE

A BOSTON woman's 3,000 mile race across the continent to reclaim her husband from his infatuation for an actress has been revealed by dispatches from San Francisco. The wife is Mrs. Mary Lucile Perry Hall, sister in law of Parker Whittington, a State street broker, who lives in Audubon road and is well known in club circles. The husband is Thurston Hall, an actor, with a wide following in the West. The wife has engaged a prominent Boston attorney.

Recently, several days ago, Mrs. Hall left Boston with her mother because of annoying reports that came to her lately concerning the absence of her husband with that of Amy Dale, a beautiful woman who had been in his stock company in St. Louis and was now in the Eastern States, where Hall was playing at the Avenue theatre, Detroit. The reports were so widespread that the young wife's natural concern for her husband's welfare was soon overshadowed by her anger at the actress and Mrs. Hall sought the services of Attorney Hall. The latter, Gordon & Warrant and Wilbert Webb, Alexander Whiteside, Francis F. Wadsworth, Charles G. Wo bridge.

CONCERT FOR SAILORS.

Catholic Alumni Auxiliary to Fete Clubmen in Charlestown.

This evening a concert will be given to the seamen at the headquarters of the Catholic Sailors' Club, Water street, Charlestown, by the auxiliary to the Boston Catholic Alumni. The program will be under the direction of the president, Mrs. Francis Mahoney, assisted by Mrs. Patrick J. Lyle, Miss Amy Heffernan, Miss Helena Dupont, Miss Mary Donovan, Mrs. A. E. Stein, Miss Mary McMahon, Miss Minnie Gibson, Mrs. Lillian Lambert, Mrs. John Flanagan and Mrs. Lissner Brennan. The annual meeting of officers of the club will take place early in June. The sum of $1,000 was recently added to the building fund of the organization by the members of the alumni in the early Fall plans will be made for the erection of new quarters.

ABORN OPERA FAREWELL.

"Tales of Hoffmann" Last Presentation of Spring Season.

The coming week will be the last of the Aborn English Grand Opera Company's Spring season at the Boston Opera House, and it will be as notable as any in the two annual engagements this organization has had here. Another attractive novelty, Offenbach's opera comique, "The Tales of Hoffmann," will be the farewell offering for the usual eight performances.

When Hammerstein first produced this opera three years ago, his presentation of it in French at the Manhattan Opera House was very creditable indeed, and later, when Messrs. Aborn gave it for the first time in English in this country, it was again received with enthusiasm.

Next week several members of the original American cast will appear with a liberal proportion of established favorites already heard at the Boston Opera House —Effie Barnaby, who has just returned to America to assume her former role of the Doll, Olympia, Homer Lind, well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a baritone and as a character actor, secured for his best role of Dr. Miracle; Bertha Waltz as Juliette, Linda Le Heron as Muriel Jean Vance as Dapertutto, Wilfred Schaefer as Spalanzani and Crespel Phillip Branson in his original comedy roles of Andreas and Franz.

COMING OF THE MORMONS AGITATES ALL OF CAPE COD

District Is Flooded With Tracts Explaining How the Religion Works.

ALL the way from Wareham down to Provincetown the subject being discussed by Cape Cod folk is the coming of the Mormons. Women are excited; clergymen are deeply interested; town and county officials are on the watch.

The Mormons in this case are the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," which has recently purchased twenty-two acres at Onset Bay, in the town of Wareham. Here the Mormons will establish their New England center. Here the Mormons will build a mammoth tabernacle. Here the Mormons will surround the Tabernacle with cottages. The Mormon tent is already erected.

Onset Bay is at present taking little heed of the word reorganized. Onset Bay knows that the other, and popular name for the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-Day Saints is "Mormons." Onset Bay knows that these Mormons preach and practice polygamy; that the men have as many wives as they want, and can support. Onset Bay is on its guard.

Busy Distributing Tracts.

Members of the Reorganized Church, known as the Josephite or anti-polygamous branch of Mormonism, may be found in several of the hamlets on Cape Cod—but as they may be found in Boston. These devoted members of the church are busy wherever engaged in the distribution of Mormon tracts and journals. One of these publications, "Autumn Leaves," a monthly for the younger people, may be picked up almost anywhere on the Cape. Another is "What We Believe." "What We Teach" is equally assuring, almost anywhere.

Hundreds of copies of these tracts have left the pages of "What We Believe" and "What We Teach" during the past few days. Onset Bay doesn't like the idea of polygamy. Onset Bay doesn't like the idea of the Mormons at all. Onset Bay has been given a "catechism."

We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, by either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression; consequently we believe that the doctrine of a plurality and a community of wives are heresies and are opposed to the law of God.

"Therefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife. For I, the Lord, God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:6.

"A very innocent and a most appealing little book," the Rev. J. Harold Gould said yesterday to the AMERICAN, "and an altogether harmless doctrine. I, however, am not ready to express judgment at this time on the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." I shall have to suspend judgment until we Wareham have had an opportunity to study these Mormons as neighbors."

Like Rev. Mr. Gould, the wife of a congressional district will be represented in the village with a town limits, in the direction of Plymouth, by Matthew Frank E. Peck of the Warehouse. Both of these young men are equally guarded and careful. Mr. Peck has been a member of the Board of Selectmen for several years. The position might be accompanied in the majority of a city. The town was originally a "district" in the 18th century, and is the ninth largest in Plymouth county.

I know only what I have been told about the Latter-Day Saints who are said to come amongst us," said "Mayor" Peck, "but I am told that they are a law-abiding people, who acknowledge that they [illegible] to the other land. [illegible] folks and I think that we are getting fast that branch of the church that practices polygamy, and has absolutely no connection whatever with the old church."

"If I care to say officially is this: If these Latter-day Saints attempt to preach polygamy and practice polygamy here the authorities will move against them firmly and at once. Ignorance of these particular Mormons are what it is hoped to know. If they are a people who doctrines contrary to the statutes of the commonwealth and practice them as tenets, they will have all the privileges belonging to them and all the protection the town of Wareham—and the counties of Plymouth and Barnstable—give words, wait to be "shown." People from these parts have been known to have been the original settlers of Missouri.

Story of the Colony.

It was some time in February or March last that Herbert Leonard, a well-known resident of East Wareham, dropped off the train at Onset Junction and took the trolley to Onset at the head of a group of Connecticut Portuguese.

Leonard is favorably known in the innermost section of the town as a good man to superintend the erection of barns. There was nothing remarkable, therefore, about his appearance except in the case of the head of a gang of laborers.

But Mr. Leonard leaped out in the direction of the Methodist Camp Ground and then struck off across the dunes—at a sharp trail the East Interior—for the purpose of learning whether what was up. Nearly a half of Onset Bay, as it is also a body of smaller and some larger communities (To rent the streets of the habit), Fair Beston, stand out in Washington street any day at 1 o'clock eating at the one of a business building)

"Hello, Herb!"

"What they all a doin' of?"

"What's what?"

"Where you in it for?"

"Where you to Bridgewater."

"Bridgewater, me?"

"No, brotherin law."

Mr. Leonard was entirely entirely about it, as far as it went and he knew. Onset Bay was satisfied with what it knew. But what circulating rumor, news came up from Pinehaven. William F. Nye, "mayor" of the "Buckshot oil king," stood on his dying bed, had sold out to the Mormons.

Real Son of New England.

William F. Nye the late William F. Nye of Fairhaven—was in the 49th degree a typical son of New England. That is to say, a typical son of—well. When the "crossed over," a year ago—your true Yankee concern believes that when a man passes out at the age of [illegible] million dollars.

It was learned that year and that way, that Mr. Nye was [illegible] last Summer by some girl [illegible] buy the building [illegible] the East River from the camp of the Mormons. The gentlemen didn't exactly make clear what they wanted the land for according to one story in circulation yesterday at Onset, but they wanted it, and they were willing to pay for it with the requisite [illegible] "Bill" Nye, who [illegible] a sucker as to [illegible] as the next man, if not more so, was ready to sell. Negotiations, however, proceeded straight along to the posting of the deed.

Colony to Settle on Land Bought From the "Black Oil King."

According to the Onset Bay version, the deed had not passed up to the death of "Bill" Nye.

Mr. Nye, they say on the Cape, had visited the Mormon settlement on Temple Lot. He knew the world and the inhabitants thereof like you know Lowell, or Lynn, or Laconia, or Lewiston. In Civil War days he amassed a large fortune—and his name lost it. He was a settler, that is, a person who followed the army and sells to the troops provisions and [illegible]. Also, he was a [illegible] assistance and friend of lincoln, and afterwards to be one of the powers of standard Oil.

Became an Oil King.

This particular type coddee kept his eyes open, as he sailed the Seven Seas and stopped off in the Kingdoms thereof, and when he got back to Seattle former he displayed a great [illegible] as the [illegible] a "small kind of wealth."

The old Cape Cod Scottish, according to what they say down on the Cape, is a particularly "dour" sort of Scot. Just the kind of oil, that is to say, for watches, and clocks, and sewing machines. Mr. Nye became known as the "Buckshot Oil King," and [illegible] and [illegible] his own, came to be known as the "Buckshot Oil Kings."

Wealth and power, however, like fame, he came to be a Spiritualist.

Mr. Nye, it is said, was president of the Onset Bay Grove Association, just about the big, [illegible] on the Bay. And Spiritualism can go [illegible] that he was president, and director in the [illegible] association; and after that—but it's a sad story—and he died [illegible] Onset Bay landholder, who desired to be prominent as a director.

In other words, "Bill" Nye became prominent as one of the Gods in the Spiritualistic temple at Onset, one of the ones who was after the loot and anxious and willing to [illegible] for the promise of [illegible] the courts; he became an [illegible] and particular and [illegible] [illegible] of Plymouth; and he never got far at it, as a Spiritualist, [illegible] he died disappointed.

Onset Bay Is Divided.

Onset Bay was anxious yesterday to get the details. Some said it was "Bill" Nye's last joke to dispose of his Onset Bay holdings to the followers of Brigham Young and the preachers of polygamy. Others said that Nye died true to the faith, the conqueror of earthly ambition, and that he must have been "earth sure" that the Mormons, when to camp at Onset, are of the "Josephite" branch.

However that may be, and it is best to be charitable, the favored heir of the brick-and-mill king of Seattle is [illegible] haven, he can. Joseph K. is also the executor of the "Bill" Nye estate, which is [illegible] forty years old, or thereabouts.

They say at Onset that Joseph K. Nye, favored heir and sole executor of "Bill" Nye's will, has had some of the [illegible] that the deed to the Mormon property will not pass until the buyers have told him what they want the twenty-two acres for, and outline the inside plans of the purchase. Whereat Onset Bay is [illegible] cheered.

Herbert Leonard of East Wareham, who began coming down to Onset in February or March at the head of his group of Portuguese, laughed loudly yesterday when this was reported to him. Mr. Leonard was found at East Wareham depot.

"Well," said Mr. Leonard, "I'm not going to talk about it. The fact is I was engaged to do the work by the name of The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, whose headquarters is [illegible] in Salt Lake, but [illegible] in Decatur County, Iowa. The gentleman who put me to work was the head of the Portuguese, laughed loudly yesterday when this was reported to him. Mr. Leonard was found at East Wareham depot.

"Well," said Mr. Leonard, "I'm not going to talk about it. The fact is I was engaged to do the work by the name of The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, whose headquarters is [illegible] in Salt Lake, but [illegible] in Decatur County, Iowa. The gentleman who put me to work was the head of the Josephite branch of the [illegible] Church, with the Rev. Ulysses S. Green of Boston and two other Bostonians, Mr. Newcomb, treasurer, and Mr. Fisher, who, I understand, is the owner of a couple of colleges, probably business colleges in Boston.

Saints to Use Tents.

"About the plans and purposes of the Saints, you don't have to ask me, I am a gentlemen, for I am ignorant. All I know is, we have cleared the underbrush and will put down the tents as fast as they are [illegible]. As I understand it, the Saints do not propose to build [illegible] but to come to Onset with tents. Another year the great Tabernacle will be ready. They will surround it with their individual cottages.

"How about two or three wives apiece?"

"Why," said the Cape Codder.

"Well, how about them?"

"Mister," said Leonard, "are YOU married?"

"Why?" asked the reporter, as equally cautious New Englander whose birthplace was in Middlesex.

"Tell me," pleaded the distinguished

"KIDS" AT REVERE TAKING THEIR FIRST DIP OF THE SEASON

To which anxious inquiry the reporter could make no fitting reply.

"However Mr. Leonard said, "I can answer no questions. You see Mr. Newcomb, the treasurer, or Mr. Fisher, or the Rev. Mr. Green, all of whom may be reached in Boston."

The Spiritualists appeared to be disturbed only a little. Like everybody else on the Cape they went to be "shown."

There are three divisions of Spiritualists at Onset. First of all comes the Onset Bay Grove Association, the present head of which is Dr. George A. Fuller, an "M. D." Then there comes the Onset Association—practically incorporated, otherwise called the "Harvest Moon Society," which proposes to raise the money with which to [illegible] a public library on its feet. The library is already open.

"Polygamy! It is unspeakable! I shall not even discuss it! If these people preach a plurality of wives, all Onset will be against them. Unless they do, Onset will extend its loving, protecting arms and they shall have our best. Representing Spiritualists for one, we stand ready to take this particular branch of the Latter-Day Saints at their own word, and to do as they say. And I would be done by."

Miss Weston, whose home is filled with beautiful water colors of her own painting, begged the AMERICAN reporter to consider the fact that her branch of the Spiritualists are Bible Spiritualists.

"We believe in the Christ Spirit," said the niece of Governor Coburn, benignantly. "We believe in the Master. Above all other things, we believe in the Christ spirit. Our Wigwam, as you have seen by the inscription placed above it, is erected to the memory of the Great One."

Founder of the Wigwam.

"I founded the Wigwam, was the first president of our society and am still the president. We hold that the Indian—the original and only true American—has never had a square deal from this republic. We want to give him one, and in a humble way we are doing what we can to send the children of the Cape Cod Mashpee, the Nova Scotia Micmacs and the Maine Passamaquoddies to the Carlisle School in Pennsylvania.

"At the present time we have six pupils there."

All through the settlement of Onset they say the praises of the Weston sisters highly.

Next to the Catholic Church at Wareham, Joe Kenny, the Salt Water Taffy man, said, "Onset Bay? Why, the Mormons may do Onset good. If the Latter Day Saints are anything like the Spiritualists we know in Onset, I wish them well, and more of them like Miss Weston! Believe me, a million Mrs. Westons would make a community to be proud of. Why, I'm not a bit guilty of hasty judgment in regard to the Latter Day Saints. Give them a trial! I say they are all right, we want a million of them."

Most of the other Onset business men approached by AMERICAN reporters seemed to be agreed. "Let the Mormons be agreed." Mr. Mulhair [illegible] "If they are all right we want them, if they are not all right," Mr. Mulhair wagged his head, "we don't."

Cape Cod has taken due notice of the drawbacks of polygamy on the part of the Latter-Day Saints. Cape Cod is willing—and anxious—to be "shown." But it MUST be shown.

NEW FEATURES FOR REVERE BEACH LIFE

Season Opens Under Favorable Conditions, with Big Crowds from Surrounding Country.

JUDGING by the crowd of about 100,000 at the Revere Beach reservation last Sunday, officials and merchants along the water front believe the number of patrons to-day will be even greater.

The daily crowd last week was the largest average attendance the beach has ever known at this season of the year and it was equal to that promenading the boulevard on a July Sunday afternoon.

Before the opening of the beach at the end of the season last year many new amusements have been added and many have opened their doors for the season for the first time in the history of the beach several theatres and flying horse managers kept their places open during the Winter months, installing heating plants for the comfort of their patrons.

Harvest of Taxes for Town.

The town will receive many thousands of dollars in taxes from new amusements along the shore, a new pier constructed at a cost of $100,000, being almost completed near Elliot Circle. It will be open for the opening of the season in Rehoboth May 27.

The pier is about 1,200 feet long, with a head house containing concessions, dance hall and roof garden, which will be opened Memorial Day. The steamer Girlwind will run between the two resorts at a ten-cent fee each way. The boat will carry 800 people and will run a fifteen-minute schedule.

A company of Revere men has been organized and work will be started soon for the construction of a mammoth bath house on the Revere beach boulevard. The structure will not open for a month, but ninety rooms, together with a large dance hall and sea bathing last Sunday children and veterans enjoyed the dips during the afternoon.

Walking along the boulevard, from Elliot Circle toward the State bathhouse, the first addition to the amusements at the beach is a roller coaster at the corner of Shirley avenue. The ride is more than a mile in length and has been patronized liberally since it was opened two weeks ago.

Diving Girl Show.

A diving girl show has been added on the opposite corner, Rose Pitonoff, the only woman to swim to Boston Light, is one of the attractions of the show. Another diving girl show is at the Monitor and Merrimac exhibition. On the property formerly occupied by the Crescent Gardens Theatre, at the junction of the Congress Island type has been constructed.

The Ell, one of the oldest and most original places of amusement on the beach, has added many features.

Owners of property fronting the Boulevard and Ocean avenues are interested in the proposed plan of Charles Cook, chairman of the Metropolitan Park Commissioners permit automobiles on the reservation Saturday and Sunday afternoons and relieve the congestion now existing on Ocean avenue.

FINGER PRINTS IN RED.

This Is Way Indians Signed Protest Against Legislation.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Sixty-six Indians' finger prints, made by digits that had been dipped in red pokeberry juice, appeared at the bottom of the Pueblo Commission that a State highway is to be constructed from Eldot, Ariz., to Lynn, and the possible route of the proposed road is threatened by the property owners.

An effort is being made by the Selectmen of Old Lyme to have the Connecticut Park Commissioners permit automobiles on the reservation Saturday and Sunday afternoons and relieve the congestion now existing on Ocean avenue.

HONOR MOTHER'S DAY IN CHURCH AND HOME

Services Today as Tribute to Woman to Be Held in Forty-three States.

To-day is Mothers' Day.

In Boston churches and Sunday schools throughout the land there will be special observances in honor of "the best mother that ever lived—your mother." On every public building in this city flags will be flying, by order of the Mayor, and in many homes there will be gatherings planned to cheer the mother heart.

Postcards of special design, bearing affectionate greeting, have been distributed by hundreds of thousands among boys and girls who are away from their mothers, and among boys and girls of larger growth their sale has been large.

This tribute to woman, the home-making factor in family life, originated in Philadelphia with Miss Alice Jarvis, and it has quickly spread through the country. The observation has been adopted as a symbol of the day, but for it may be substituted the flower that was the favorite of [illegible] mother.

"To recall the memories of mothers that are gone, and brighten the lives of those that remain" is the purpose of the men and women who have been urging the setting apart of a day in honor of mothers. In forty-three States the churches will observe it.

Responsive readings have been arranged and "Mother Day" by William Lyon Phelps and Bryant will form a part of the exercises in many churches. From many pulpits sermons will be preached from the text, "Her children arise up and call her blessed," but it is in the home that the truest tribute will be paid.

REVERE ELKS WILL PLAY IN BLACK FACE

Lodge Will Give Big Minstrel Show in Scenic Temple Thursday Evening.

The minstrel show of the Revere Lodge of Elks, the baby lodge of New England, will be given in the Scenic Temple, Revere Beach, Thursday and Friday evenings of this week. The Elks of Greater Boston are arranging to attend the performances and greet their brothers in their second amateur production.

The participants are all members of the Revere Lodge. They will appear in a musical sketch, entitled Col Pilsners Surprise Party, which will be the opening act, showing the characters as members of the Hingetown Hunting Club in the early days of that clubhouse.

D. J. Hurley will take the part of Col. Pilsner and will be supported by Wm. Cahir, James H. Hubbard, Frank J. Campbell, Thomas H. Andrews, John F. Doherty, Fred Millward and John J. Chaffee, Jr. here.

Following the opening sketch the second part will consist of the old time minstrel opening, with Chairman Hurley and eight ends with exalted ruler, Dr. John D. Walsh, as interlocutor. The ends will be John J. Flaherty, W. Paine Mitchell, James D. Hubbard, Joseph F. Wills, Albert Valois, Frank J. Campbell, Fred L. Butler, Arthur Hall and D. J. Hurley and Fred Millward, soloists.

The circle will include Cornelius F. Ahearn, John P. Putnam, William O'Neil, Frank H. Kelly, Edward Whig, Daniel A. Ahearn, Walter F. Mabeat, Arthur Hall, Fred Hall, Chester Doherty, Joseph H. BIG MUNICIPAL DOCK FAVORED BY QUINCY

Public Meetings Called to Discuss Best Plan to Develop Waterfront.

Encouraged by the agitation in Boston, and other cities along the Massachusetts coast, for better docking facilities, and for the development of the waterfront of Boston harbor, the live men of Quincy, through their various trade organizations are making every effort to have a municipal dock constructed somewhere along its twenty-six miles of water front. Public hearings are to be held in every section of the city. It is the consensus of opinion that a public dock is a necessity for the future development of Quincy.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad owns and controls over 200 acres of land on the Quincy side of the Neponset River. Hodges Neck at the mouth of Quincy Bay an unobstructed channel of thirty feet depth which is three miles nearer to the open ocean than any of the docks in Boston. Quincy has a twenty-foot channel as far as Quincy Point and a six foot channel up Quincy River, almost to the centre of the city, and a large area of cheap land available for docking purposes and factory sites.

Mayor William T. Shea, an earnest student of waterfront development, has taken active interest in this matter, and has instructed Commissioner of Waterfront and Docks Frank F. Crane to devote his entire attention to the waterfront question. The Board of Trade, Ward 1 Improvement Association and the Granite Manufacturers' Association and several other live societies have taken up the matter and have indorsed the movement. A committee has been appointed by the Board of Trade and the Granite Manufacturers to work jointly to secure a location for a public dock. President Charles M. Bryant of the City Council and the majority of the members of the council have expressed themselves in favor of the establishment of a public dock, but insist that action be taken immediately.

Commissioner Crane said to a Sunday AMERICAN reporter: "Quincy has awakened to the fact that there are wonderful prospects in the way of becoming not only a big industrial city but the port of many steamship companies. There are few cities on the Atlantic coast that can boast of twenty-six miles of open waterfront. I am a firm believer in Quincy's future and so is Mayor Shea. For the last five months under orders from Mayor Shea, I have investigated the matter of establishing a public dock in Quincy. I maintain that it will be the greatest thing possible for Quincy and will be the means of bringing to Quincy many industries. I also believe that Quincy will be the port of several large steamship companies if any attempt is made to develop the waterfront."

KNOX TO BE SPEAKER AT CANADIAN DINNER

Many Notables Will Be Intercolonial Club Guests at Banquet on Empire Day.

The Empire Day banquet and ladies' night of the Intercolonial club on Wednesday evening, May 24, will be the most important event of the year among Canadians in Boston. No efforts are being spared to make the event a notable one. For weeks the committees have been at work perfecting every detail of the affair.

President Taft has sent his regret and will be ably represented by Secretary of State Knox, who will make an address for the United States Government. It is expected that Ambassador Bryce will make a speech in regard to Canadian friendship.

As for the speakers on the part of the Canadians, Premier Borden has been invited to be present, but it is not known whether he will be able to attend. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the opposition in the Canadian parliament, has been invited to be present, but it is not known whether he will be able to attend. Sir Richard McBride, premier of British Columbia, who will also make an address, is expected, but his presence is not definitely assured.

Mrs. John Hays Hammond's Gowns Are Marvels

Robes for King George Coronation Excel in Beauty

MRS. JOHN H. HAMMOND, WHO GOES TO CORONATION, AND DAUGHTER

THE gowns that Mrs. John Hays Hammond will wear at the coronation of King George V., at which ceremony her husband is Special Ambassador of the United States, promise to surpass in richness and beauty those worn by the representative of any other country. Those who have seen them or say that they are the most wonderful creations their eyes ever rested upon.

The Hammonds will sail from New York May 27. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, there will be in their party their children, except Harris, the eldest son. The others are John Hays Hammond, Jr., Richard and Natalie. He is to act as escort of Countess Cassini, daughter of the former Russian ambassador to the United States.

In London the family will occupy the Baroness Burdett Coutts' house at No. 1 Stratton street, Piccadilly. The house is large and has room enough for the extensive entertaining that the Hammonds will do while there. They will be gone six weeks.

Catherine II. Emeralds.

Mrs. Hammond has ordered her gowns from Europe. She has done this contrary to her custom, for she believes that American dressmakers can do quite as well as foreigners.

She believes in this case, however, that the European dress are more familiar with the proper details for gowns to be worn at court functions. All of the smaller articles of dress and her jewelry have been purchased at home.

Those who have seen the gowns declare that they are marvels of beauty. Four of them are court gowns. One of these is the coronation, a second for her presentation at court, the third for the royal garden party at Buckingham Palace.

The coronation gown is of white satin. It is trimmed with peacock feathers, the eyes of which are sapphires and emeralds. With this gown Mrs. Hammond will wear a tiara of diamonds and emeralds, a necklace and bracelets of the same stones, while the earrings of emeralds are stones that were once worn by Catherine II. of Russia.

To Open Gloucester Home.

The Hammonds will return to this country in July. They will go at once to their Summer home on Lookout Point, Gloucester. Some of the servants will be sent from Washington as soon as the family sails to prepare the Gloucester home for the return.

John Hays Hammond himself will present a striking contrast to the men who surround him. Even the attaches who go with him will appear elaborately dressed compared to the black conventional clothes that he will wear. He will have a naval and a military attache, the former being a rear admiral and the latter a major general. Their dress uniforms will be covered with gold and lace.

The two children, Richard and Natalie, are twelve and ten years old, respectively. Little Natalie is named after her mother. The boy is better known as "Dick."

John Hays Hammond is well known in England. It will be remembered that he was at one time partner with Cecil Rhodes, and is a friend of Rudyard Kipling.

Mr. Hammond was in South Africa at the time of the famous Dr. Jameson raid into the Transvaal. The doctor, a Scottish physician who had practiced at Kimberley, was the administrator of the British South Africa Company. With 600 armed men he started for Johannesburg. He later surrendered to the South African republic and Paul Kruger sent him to England.

Friend of Cecil Rhodes.

At the time of the raid Mr. Hammond was conducting the Cecil Rhodes mines. He was charged with rebellion and it was alleged by Kruger that he had communicated with Dr. Jameson and had 2,700 men ready to join him at Johannesburg, during which Mr. Hammond was 3 and unable to appear as a witness. Hammond was sentenced to be hanged. Later he was pardoned by Kruger, who curiously remarked: "This man is worth more alive to us than he is dead."

During his confinement, Mr. Hammond received a visit from Mark Twain, whom he knew well. After his release he returned to England. The Hammonds are now in Washington. They occupy the Senator Boot home at No. 1,700 Massachusetts avenue.

MAY BUY AN ISLAND FOR THE BOY LEPER

PAWTUCKET, May 13.—Harry Sherman, the boy leper, son of Edward P. Sherman of No. 83 Kenyon avenue, will have to spend his life in Rhode Island in some isolated spot yet to be chosen, Governor Pothier this afternoon said he had not written to Governor Foss regarding a proposition to allow the lad to be placed on Massachusetts leper colony on Penikese Island.

The proof of the case lies in the hands of Dr. Gardner W. Swarts, secretary of the Rhode Island State Board of Health. Today Dr. Swarts declared this State would not be likely to ask the aid of Massachusetts as he has another plan for young Sherman's future.

It may be that Rhode Island will purchase an island where the boy will live, and in case like existence will other additions are made to the colony.

The new list of candidates' standing, with a total of each candidate, appears in another section of this issue of the Sunday AMERICAN.

This list is compiled up to and including April 29. It contains the names of all candidates who had 40,000 votes or over up to that date.

Just as the Contest Editor said, there are numerous important shifts in the position of candidates, especially among the capital prize leaders and the district leaders.

In the last printed list the leader for the capital prize, the $2,000 house and $500 gold piece, was Miss Gordon of the Charles, was Thomas L. Sullivan of Revere. Being the only New England home was also his district leader District One.

Day Ousts Sullivan.

Sullivan is now superseded as capital prize leader by Frank E. Day of Everett (District Two). Sullivan has also lost his district leadership, being second in District One.

The new District One leader is John F. Galligan of Boston. He was second in District One in the last list. Now he not only leads his district but is second in the race for the home.

In District Two Frank F. Day, the capital prize leader, is, of course, the District Two leader also. But if Day wins the house he will be eliminated from the district contest in District Two. Next to Day in District Two is W. E. McDonald of Woburn, with R. L. Meader of Riverside third.

In District Three Charles D. F. Dunlap of Ipswich, the former district leader, has been passed by J. M. Heroux of Springfield, who now leads first place. Reynolds was second for District Three in the last list. It will be noted that Harry Bland, though both positions six and seven respectively in the race for the capital prize.

The third and fourth positions in District Three are now held by A. W. Gadgan, the Lynn [illegible] and Joseph Arnold, both of [illegible]. These two have moved up one in the last list, when Gadgan was fourth and Dunlap fifth.

Thomas A. Foley of Portland, Me., who led District Four in the last list, has been supplanted by [illegible] of Rumford, Me., the new District Four leader.

Charles W. Weaver of Portsmouth, N. H., still holds his place as leader of District Five. But he has lost ground in the race for the capital prize. In the last list he was second for the house. Now he is fifth.

There is a spirited race in District Six (Rhode Island). The leader in that district in the last list was William M. Wood, the blind candidate of Arnolds Mills. Now Wood has been passed by Rose Fink of Providence. But Wood is holding second place for Little Rhody.

We have a brand new leader for District Seven. She is Beulah Coons of Pittsfield. She has jumped from fourth position in the district leadership since the last list, making the first position away from Chandler Dalton of Putnam.

Through a typographical error three names were omitted from today's printed list of candidates' standing. They should have appeared as follows:

Dist. 2, William Brooks, Lowell	321,686
Dist. 5, William C. Butler, Bellows Falls, Vt.	119,288
District 3—Mrs. William Campbell, North Adams	80,005

42 Prizes Are Offered.

To all candidates:

After you have studied over the new list all you wish, get busy on that special day after again.

Forty-two prizes aggregating $1,000 in cash are offered to the forty-two candidates who have the highest [illegible] standings between May 1 and May 31, up to 10 p. m. inclusive.

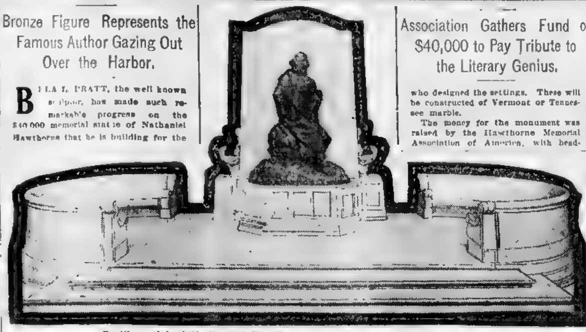
Model of Hawthorne Memorial Statue for Salem Completed by Sculptor Pratt

Bronze Figure Represents the Famous Author Gazing Out Over the Harbor.

Association Gathers Fund of $40,000 to Pay Tribute to the Literary Genius.



Pratt's model of Nathaniel Hawthorne statue, to be placed on Salem Common.

BELA L. PRATT, the well known sculptor, has made such remarkable progress on the $40,000 memorial statue of Nathaniel Hawthorne that he is building for the Hawthorne Memorial Association, to be placed on the Common at Salem, that the model will be sent to Salem some time next week, and will be on exhibition for the summer at the Essex Institute.

The monument will consist of a nine-foot bronze figure of the author, Hawthorne, offset by marble settings and two drinking fountains.

The statue represents Hawthorne about the time he was an employe in the Salem custom house. It was a custom of the author to go to Salem harbor evenings and sit on the rocks for hours at a time. The memorial represents him on one of these occasions. Mr. Pratt did his work almost entirely from pictures.

Several persons posed at various times to aid the sculptor in completing details of his work. The bas relief on the back of the statue illustrates the spirit of a New England romance. The two women shown are said by some to be characters of the author, but Mr. Pratt denies that this is so.

On each side of the statue is a gothic ornament drinking fountain. When in place it will be the only statue in Salem Common.

The architectural part of the memorial was done by R. C. Sturgis, who designed the settings. These will be constructed of Vermont or Tennessee marble.

The money for the monument was raised by the Hawthorne Memorial Association of America, with headquarters at Salem. Judge Alden P. White is president of the organization and Highland P. Kilsey secretary.

Mr. Pratt has been working on the statue for about a year, and says that it will take a year or a year and a half more before it is set up and turned over to the association. Working continuously, he says he could finish the work in six months, but believes it better to work only a little each day on such things, as the imagination and interest is thus kept fresh and vigorous. He is also working on other statues.

Mr. Pratt graduated from the Yale art department in '89, and has been in Boston for eighteen years.

FOSS SIGNS LABOR UNION FINE BILL

Measure for Which Organized Labor Has Fought for Years Saved at Last Moment.

Governor Foss at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, with only fifteen minutes to spare, signed the bill advocated by organized labor permitting unions to impose and collect fines from members in order to enforce lock-outs and strikes.

The Governor had until 4:45 o'clock in which to act on the bill. It was ordered in the Senate on Tuesday last at 4:45 and under the law he had five days in which to sign or veto it.

It is understood that many prominent attorneys urged him to exercise his veto power, but former Representative Thomas P. Riley of Malden had a conference with Governor Foss in the afternoon and urged him to sign the measure.

Until three years ago labor unions in this State fined members without the right being questioned. Then the matter was taken before the Massachusetts Supreme court and by a majority of one the justices decided that the practice was illegal. Chief Justice Knowlton was one of the three dissenters from this opinion. Organized labor then had a bill introduced in the Legislature in 1909 making it lawful to impose and collect fines. The bill was beaten this year and the next. This year it was introduced again by Senator Doyle of Boston and passed in the House and Senate by a big majority. It is considered a big piece of legislation for labor unions.

BENTON GOES TO VERMONT.

Comes From Ohio to Take Presidency of University.

Dr. Guy Potter Benton, president of Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, who declined the presidency of Boston University last June, has accepted the presidency of the University of Vermont. News of this has just been received in Boston.

Dr. Benton is forty-five years old. He was called to Baker University in 1890 to take the chair of history and sociology and remained with the faculty there three years. He served as chairman of the Kansas State Board of Education and later was president of the Upper Iowa University.

SCHOOL INQUIRY TO CAUSE A SENSATION

Melrose Board Special Committee Will Open Building Investigation Tuesday Evening.

The investigation into the construction of the two wings of the Melrose High School, recently completed, will open Tuesday evening in the city hall. A member of the State police force has been ordered to be present. Witnesses have been summoned in true court style.

Since the erection of the additions to the building at a cost of upwards of $85,000 [illegible] have repeatedly criticised the [illegible] equipment. Investigations have been repeatedly asked and it was while the committee on buildings was looking into some of these conditions that it came upon evidence of a nature to ask for the appointment of a special committee with sufficient power to cause the whole affair to be thoroughly shown up. The hearing Tuesday night is to be public.

Do Not Show Your Age in Your Complexion

By DOROTHY VENY

(From San Francisco Examiner)

What woman would not look young if she had a clear, soft complexion?

"Yes, we never grow old in Japan—I mean the women's faces never show age. All Japanese women use mayatone dissolved in witchhazel, and massage the solution thoroughly into the face, neck and arms once or twice a day. This treatment is absolutely harmless even to a baby's skin and gives wonderful results, removing all manner of facial blemishes. It also prevents the growth of hair. You never saw a Japanese woman with hair on her face.

"Take a small original package of mayatone and dissolve it all in eight ounces of witchhazel, and you are supplied with this aid to youth."

GOVERNOR PLANS TAXATION REFORM

Would Have Local Assessors Work Under State Supervision to Prevent Favoritism.

The need of State supervision of the assessment of property by local assessors is pointed out in a statement issued from Governor Foss's office. The statement indicates that the Governor is determined to wipe out the present laxness of local assessors. One section is interpreted to mean that the Governor is not opposed to the levying of a State income tax, and that he believes a federal income tax and a State income tax are not incompatible.

State Losing Taxes.

The statement follows:

Governor Foss has had brought to his attention this week the fact that estates of considerable size have recently been removed from the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth by changes in the trustees having charge of the estates. It is reported, by persons in a position to know, that a considerable number of other removals are contemplated, and that the cause for the removals is the taxation laws of the Commonwealth. Legislation has been proposed to meet the situation, but such measures present various difficulties. It is probable that during the coming week the Governor will have conferences with a number of persons conversant with the situation.

From Governor Mann, of Virginia, news has been received that that State, in 1902, amended its State constitution, and that a special commission is now undertaking a thorough revision of the tax laws of the State. Governor Mann writes that he has been giving a good deal of his personal attention to this work and it is learned from other sources that there is every reason for thinking that during the next year Virginia will enact important tax legislation along progressive lines.

The subject of State supervision of the assessment of property by local assessors comes more and more to the forefront as the Governor's investigation of the taxation problem proceeds. The tax commissioner now has merely supervisory powers over the local assessors, but it appears that a number of other States have created tax commissions that have been given effective power to compel local assessors to obey the tax laws of the State. A few States have created the office of county supervisor directly responsible to the State Tax Commission, and some have given to the Tax Commission authority to go into any taxing district and make a revaluation of the property there [illegible] shall be followed [illegible] tax levies. New Hampshire [illegible] last Spring, appointed a State Tax Commission. The proposal to create the office of State Tax [illegible] is now before the Legislature of Rhode Island and [illegible] commission in Illinois [illegible] recommended the appointment [illegible] permanent Tax Commission.

State Oversight Needed.

In all the States investigated the conditions seem to be the same with respect to the need for State supervision. Local boards of assessors are reported to be subject to certain local pressure, with the result that they cannot, or at least [illegible] enforce the law uniformly [illegible] taxpayers.

Recently discussions of [illegible] Income Tax and the advisability of introducing a State tax upon incomes have raised the question whether State taxation of incomes is compatible with similar taxation by the Federal Government. Investigation shows that in some other countries income taxes are employed both for State and for local purposes, and there would seem to be no reason in the nature of the case why State and Federal income taxes are incompatible. Much would [illegible] upon whether the State income tax were an addition to the present system of taxation, or a substitute for some parts of the existing system.

It appears that Wisconsin, in 1908, adopted a constitutional amendment authorizing a State income tax, a measure which had long been advocated by Governor La Follette. This has not prevented Wisconsin from ratifying permanently the federal income tax, and proceeding, at the present session of the Legislature to consider plans for a State income tax. Drafts of the different State income tax laws proposed in Wisconsin have been received by Governor Foss and are now under examination.

HARVARD BEATEN BY YALE IN BIG DUAL MEET

Blue Triumphs by a 6-Point Margin in the Annual Track and Field Contests at New Haven; Jacques Wins the Mile

YALE FIELD, New Haven, Ct., May 13. —Yale won the dual track meet from Harvard to-day by a score of 48½ points to 48⅓ points. A dispute arose in the 220 yards hurdles and the event remained unchanged. As more than fifty-two points win the meet, Yale has a clear title to the victory.

The feature of the meet was the pole vault of Robert A. Gardner of Chicago, the former amateur golf champion. He cleared the bar at 12 feet 8 inches to win the medal after the event had been decided with Gardner, Wagoner and Byers of Yale a tie for first at 11 feet 9 inches.

Gardner's vault is the best on record, but Referee James Sullivan ruled that it does not constitute a world's record, as it was purely an exhibition.

Dispute in Hurdles.

The muddle which arose on the furlong hurdle race was due to a dispute between officials. Wm. H. Robertson of the New York Athletic Club did not explode the percussion cap in his revolver when he started the athletes but they tore away and had leaped over three hurdles when he ordered them back.

The Yale hurdlers stopped when they heard his revolver order them back, but the Harvard men kept on running in response to calls from several Harvard alumni who shouted out, "There's no calling back runners who have started."

Starter Robertson was overruled by Referee Sullivan, who declared it a race.

The Harvard alumni at first refused to receive it as a race and it was run over. Chisholm of Yale winning and Lewis and Cummings of Harvard taking second and third.

Referee Sullivan's decision, however, left the run-off purely an exhibition. It will be settled by the dual cup committee whether the first or the second race will count.

If the second counts the final score will be Yale 59½ to Harvard's 44½ points, as only two men finished in the disputed hurdle race one point is missing anyway.

Yale Got Most Firsts.

Yale failed to score in all three distance events, the half-mile, the mile and the two-mile runs. Harvard was blanked in also three, the furlong flat, the broad jump and the pole vault.

Yale scored seven firsts to five for Harvard, the discussed furlong hurdle race excluded. Yale scored seven seconds to five for Harvard and Yale captured six thirds to six for the Crimson.

Captain Kilpatrick of Yale scored seven points for his team, taking the shot-put and coming second in the broad jump. Chisholm of Yale really was both hurdle races, although one will not be decided for some time.

Reilly of Yale scored a pretty victory in the 100-yards dash in the remarkably fast time of 10 seconds flat.

Bleistein took the 220-yard dash in 22⅘ flat. Foster of Harvard started in the first heat of this race, but squarely broke down, in condition he was regarded a likely winner of the event.

Yale scored 17 points in the running events to 31 for the Crimson. The field events went to Yale by 31½ points to only 17⅓ for Harvard.

The day was ideal for the athletes, and about 3,000 people saw the events.

While the races were exciting, none of the finishes were especially close. In the 100-yard dash Reilly, who was booked for

JONAH CATCHER HURT.

Bloomstein Is Smashed in the Nose Again.

BROCKTON, May 13.—A lapse of memory on the part of Bloomstein of 24 Perkins st., who was catching at the Lawrence-st. grounds this afternoon, resulted in a lacerated wound over the left eye that was caused when he was hit by a bat thrown by a player of the opposing team. Bloomstein had caught a high foul after a long run. During that he had not put on the mask that he had thrown off when he started for the foul. Bloomstein stepped up behind the batter. The batter swung at the first ball thrown and drove out a single. He threw the bat which struck Bloomstein over the left eye. The plucky catcher refused to quit until his mates became alarmed at the loss of blood.

Reluctantly he went to the Emergency station, where he submitted to the treatment. He positively refused to play after their favorite was injured. Young Bloomstein had been in the city a few weeks ago he was mobbed by admirers. Before New York Cup to a week ago he was mobbed by admirers. Before he was injured a few weeks ago in the same place with a foul tip.

MERIDIAN WINS DERBY.

LOUISVILLE, May 13.—Meridian, paying $7.80 in the mutuals, won the Kentucky Derby to-day. Governor Gray, favorite at $2.70, was second, and Colston, a 20-1 shot, was third. The time for the mile and a quarter was 2.05, a new record for the event, the record of 2.06 having stood for fifteen years, being made by Sysonby in 1905. Three were serious to-day. Arch said rode the winner, Troxler was on the favorite, and Conley had the leg on the third horse. Mat Lill, Jack Denman, Colonel Hogan and Sound the Knell also ran.

PENN OARSMEN EASY WINNERS OVER YALE CREW

Veterans From Quaker University Prove Too Fast for Young Athletes From New Haven; Ten Lengths Separate Shells

SPRINGFIELD, May 13.—The Pennsylvania crew put it all over Yale here this afternoon in the eight-oared race over a two-mile course, winning by over five lengths in 9 minutes 10 2-5 seconds.

The Pennsylvania crew rolled a fast, even stroke, averaging thirty-eight to the minute, and the shell fairly leaped through the water. Yale pulled nearly as fast but there was less snap to it and before the first half-mile it was evident Old Eli was scheduled for defeat.

This was the first big college race on the Connecticut river for more than a quarter of a century. In spite of this the race was admirably handled. The course was kept entirely free of river craft and the race was run off with no delays. The course was two miles straightaway, the starting point being opposite the Springfield Country Club and the finish about 200 yards north of the Boston & Albany railroad bridge. The Holyoke road was lined with automobiles, while both the east and west banks of the river were crowded with spectators nearly the entire distance. There were also several hundred river craft anchored along the course.

There were five Yale sympathizers to every one for Pennsylvania, and thus when the Quaker crew crossed the finish line fully five lengths ahead there was comparatively little cheering.

No Morning Practice.

Neither crew was out for morning practice, both resting in anticipation of the race. Shortly before 5 o'clock the Yale crew left its quarters at the Rockrimmon Boat Club and pulled slowly upstream. The Quakers on the other hand went to the starting point in a launch towing the shell. As the current was running fairly swift, the Yale crew was obliged to use considerable exertion and it is believed the men were not as fresh at the start as were the Quakers. It was very evident in a comparison of the crews that Yale had gone in for a fight. The men averaged 177 pounds while Pennsylvania averaged a fraction over 170.

The Quakers having practiced on the quiet Schuylkill river, have been accustomed to calm water, and the smooth course was clearly in their favor. They weathered their oars lower than Yale men, who have been accustomed to practice on the harbor. The Pennsylvania men used less back work and made up for this with a longer slide.

They started their stroke at 35, quickened this to 38 and even rowed as high as 40 to the minute. The Yale men quickened their stroke accordingly but it was far less effective.

Ellis Win the Toss.

Yale won the toss and chose the east side of the course. The start was made at 5:15, the crews rowing down stream. For the first quarter of a mile the shells were side by side. It could be seen, however, that the Quakers, with seven veterans, were making more of their stroke than were the Yale men. Slowly Pennsylvania crew ahead and at the half mile water could be seen between the shells. Even then it was believed that Yale might show the old grim determination and close the gap. It was not to be, however, and the distance between the shells continued to increase. At the mile, the Quakers were over three lengths to the good and was rowing in beautiful form.

At the mile and a half Yale quickened its stroke and tried a spurt but it was impossible to gain on the leaders. For the last half mile Yale held its place, but when the finish line was crossed the Quakers were over five lengths to the good.

GOLF PLAYERS ALL "DIED."

Cemetery Contest at Woodland and Men Have Tombstones.

The members of the Woodland Golf Club played in a cemetery contest yesterday afternoon, which was more or less of a novelty to the members. Each player was given a tombstone and a miniature tombstone with a certain set score on it. And when the player had played the number of strokes written on his tombstone he put it in the ground showing where he played his last shot, or, as it is called in this game, where he "died."

Forty players performed cards in this event and E. H. Whittemore won with 101 strokes which put his tombstone on the nineteenth ole. The winner is one of those events in which the player who died nearest the clubhouse, but this time he had enough to carry him one extra hole.

Hal Chase Is Ill.

CLEVELAND, O., May 13.—Hal Chase, manager of the New York Yankees, may be out of the game for a week as a result of an attack of grippe. He was under a physician's care at the Colonial Hotel to-day. Chase caught a cold in Detroit, which rapidly grew worse.

PIRATES SMASH OUT VICTORY FROM RUSTLERS

Curtis Keeps Them in Bounds Early in the Game, but They Clean Up Five Runs in the Eighth—Another Home Run

By R. W. LARDNER.

THERE were only a dozen runs scored at the South End Grounds yesterday, and only one person put out of the game, so it was a pretty tame affair, all things considered.

Over 4,000 people saw the Pirates and Cliff Curtis and beat him, 9 to 3. As was the fifth straight licking for our Boston boys, so it didn't surprise anybody. On their various ways homeward, the boys had to think of something more interesting to talk about than the mere defeat. They selected Mat Eason and his allied evil practice at the profession of umpiring. Mat was certainly abused all the way from the park to the supper table, but the chances are he ate a big meal himself, and passed a restful night. A couple of his decisions looked bad to the crowd, but you must remember that it is much easier to judge a play from a position right over the ball from the grandstand or bleacher than when umpires would occupy seats over the home base half forth.

Wagner's Bracing Plays

Honus Wagner is such a vicious old soldier that people seldom think what kind of a shortstop he is. That he's an all-fired good one was demonstrated several times during this particular pastime. The Flying Dutchman's best play of the day was one that didn't work, and for that reason it was probably lost sight of by the fourth inning, which left Miller on second and Butler at first. Bill Collins sent a grounder of medium speed at the Pittsburg Miller. The latter picked it up and whipped it to Honus to force Butler. Butler was forced all right, but Wagner had to face right field to take the throw. He realized that it would be impossible to double a man of Collins's speed at first, but he thought Dot Miller would get a few feet past third, expecting the ball to be leaved to Hunter. So, with some sort of wrist motion, impossible with most athletes, he took a chance shot at third base. As it happened, Dot was a few feet off the bag, but Bobby Byrne didn't suspect Honus of such base hitting and didn't run to the sack in time.

The round in which Mr. Wagner's play did work was the sixth. Almeida grew and annihed he pulled Lefty Leifield out of a hole that might have smothered him. Lefty started pitching in that inning. Adams had been doing the work, but Babe wasn't feeling good and Clarke thought it best to let him rest. Lefty didn't last much longer than Adams, for Wagner, right after he had saved Leifield from a big inning, was himself touched for a double play. Immediately afterward Dreyfuss pulled what was serious enough to attempt to drop a Texas Leaguer out of Manager Clarke's reach in left. Mr. Wagner, as first as it struck, and as graceful as an extremely large cow, loped over to the left field stand and smothered it. And, believe us, it was a good thing for the stand that Honus didn't have to run into it to accomplish his all design.

Hunter an Attraction.

Aside from the large Dutchman, Fred Hunter, the recently new first baseman, was the big attraction, principally because he was new. Hunter brought with him a reputation as a wonderful first baseman and a weak hitter. He didn't have much chance to shine on the fielding end. He did the first base duties acceptably. But, if his afternoon's work with the bat is a criterion, he's a weak hitter, like Scotty

SOX BEAT DETROIT IN FURIOUS GAME

Capture First of Series in Whirlwind Finish—Get the Lead with Seven Runs in the Ninth and Win Out in Tenth—Speaker Sacrifices for the Victory, but Riggert and Williams Become Heroes—Pitchers Slaughtered.

DETROIT, Mich., May 13. With the score 10 to 4 against them and facing their most fierce on the bat the Red Sox in their home with the most stirring batting rally seen on Detroit ... this year. When they finished they had scored ... and led in the contest.

The Tigers tied them up in their half of the same inning, but the fighting blood of the Boston crew was boiling, and they would not be denied. In the tenth they batted in two more runs and this was enough to win them the verdict, the final score being 12 to 14, in favor of Patsy Donovan's men.

The game contained about every thing known to the last score as well as many baseball possibilities which could not be set down in mere figures.

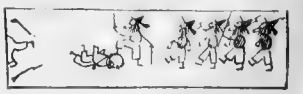
Most prominent of all the incidents from a Boston point of view, however, was the fact that the visitors was achieved at the expense of a loss to the club for an indefinite period of the services of Tris Speaker, the peerless outfielder and stickerest on the Sox.

Hooper and Speaker execute out a run in the first inning. The Sox got a slight lead.

Ty Cobb leads a six run slaughter in the 7th inning, and it looks as if it's all over for Boston.

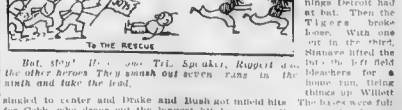
Speaker was injured in the tenth inning when he collided with Baker while trying to field a batted ball. Baker was knocked unconscious and Speaker was carried off the field. A long delay ensued, but he finally threw an arm over the shoulder of two of his mates, and managed to hobble to the bench, where he was a delighted spectator of what followed, regardless of the pain which throbbed through his disabled prop.

His desperate slide was responsible for one of the big elements of Boston success in the final result, as Purtell, who was called in to run for him, scored the run which broke the tie and won in it-



The Tigers put Baker out of business and proved to fall on Charley Hall, too, and it's 10 to 4 against

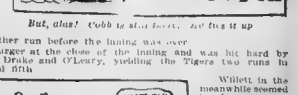
The game started with Willett and Kaiser batting on the mound. The Red Sox got an early lead on bunched singles in the first, by Hooper and Speaker.



But, Hey! Here come The Speaker, Riggert and the other heroes They smash out seven runs in the ninth and take the lead.

Six Tigers faced Kaiser in the first two innings Detroit had set out. Then the Tigers broke loose. With one out in the third, Stanage lifted the ball over the left field bleachers for a home run, tieing things up. Willett singled to center and Drake and Bush got infield hits. The bases were full for Cobb, who drove out the longest hit known on Detroit ... It was the first ball ever hit over the right field barrier with its fair territory and was productive of four runs.

A single, a wide throw from the outfield and a sacrifice By yielded Detroit another run before the inning was over.



But, alas! Cobb is stopped, and the Sox go up

Hall relieved Kaiser at the close of the inning and was hit hard by Crawford, Stanage, Drake and O'Leary, yielding the Tigers two runs in both the fourth and fifth.

Willett in the meanwhile seemed to have everything. Lewis and Williams were about the only Bostonians who could locate his delivery and the two runs which resulted from their hitting, mainly, brought

GIANTS SCORE 13 RUNS IN 1ST INNING

Beat Cardinals by 19 to 5 Score in a Record-Breaking Game.

NEW YORK, May 13.—That first inning of the game between the Giants and Roger Bresnahan's St. Louis Cardinals at the Hilltop this afternoon will go in baseball history as something of a record. The Giants made nine hits and thirteen runs off pitchers, Salee, Harmon and Lauder, one left and two right handers.

The Giants batted in their order from Devore back to Doyle, eleven men in all before an out was made. They batted through Catcher Meyers before the side was retired, seventeen men in all.

Seven Giants made runs before a man was out. Six singles, a two bagger, a triple and a home run by Merkle made up the Giants swatting record. Jack Murray got two runs without an "at bat."

All in all, it was about the weirdest single inning of baseball ever seen in New York and it was joyous indeed to the Giants who remembered those disastrous sessions in St. Louis last year. Roger Bresnahan became disgusted and took himself out of the game, while McGraw who had started with Christy Mathewson, expecting a fight from his old friend switched his team around and gave all his men a chance to play. PHILLIES BEAT REDS IN 16TH INNING, 5 TO 4

PHILADELPHIA, May 13.—Pat Moran dubbed a single on the nose in the sixteenth inning of the Phillies-Cincinnati game, with Luderus on second and Doolan on first, and Paskert slid across the plate. Score: Phillies, 5; Cincinnati, 4.

Smith, the former Chicago-Boston pitcher, had held the Phillies in his mitt for nine innings, and then came the downfall. Alexander relieved Chalmers in the ninth, and the Reds did not bag a single off his delivery.

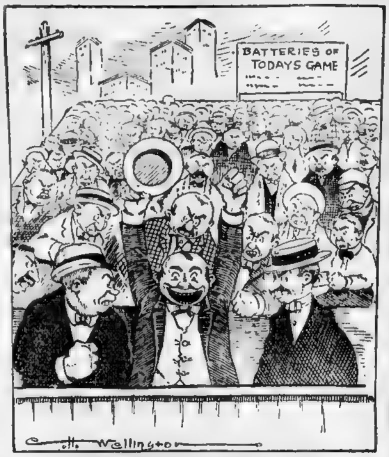
EIGHTH INNING AT SOUTH END PARK



PUZZLE: Find the Man From Pittsburg.

Ingerton and Doc Miller. Fred wanted to [illegible] Instead of clouting a home run over either of the fences or into the seats [illegible] picked a spot in the right centre bed [illegible] and sent the ball there by special delivery. Incidentally, it was the thirteenth home run in seven days at our yard.

For the first seven innings Cliff Curtis looked better than the score indicates. He seemed to have something. Hunter's homer came with two down in the second. Mike Simon, who had a field day with his [illegible], [illegible] of the third with a scratch single over Butler, who was trying to improve on Spratt's showing at second base. Adams sacrificed, [illegible] flied to Josh Clarke. [illegible] another scratch single over Curtis's bean and Simon raced to third. Manager Clarke stepped in with a slap to right which scored Mike. Two were deceased in the fourth when Hunter singled and stole and tallied on Wilson's safe smack. Mr. Graham couldn't be blamed for Hunter's theft, for the Pirate first sacker was almost at second before Curtis pitched.

The Rustlers almost got it in their half of the fourth. One was down when R. Miller walked. The wind or something else fooled Fred Clarke on Butler's fly, for he misjudged it in a rare misdemeanor for him. It fell safe and Doc stopped at second. Collins forced Butler and then stole, and Peaches Graham drove in two tallies with a poke to center.

Clarke Opens With Triple.

There was no more counting on either side until the eighth. Manager Clarke set the pace in this round with a triple to right. Mr. Curtis proceeded to collect three errors, a muff [illegible] and a wild throw, and the combination of these with a pass, a sacrifice hit and a walk, netted five big juicy runs. The Rustlers came back rather feebly [illegible] filling the bases on singles by Ingerton, Miller and Butler, and getting Scotty across the plate on a sacrifice fly.

Mr. Eason's decision at second base in the ninth was the one with which Manager Tenney kicked until he was [illegible] out of the park. J. Miller was [illegible] a pitched ball and caught off first. Instead of returning to the bag he started for second and Tenney threw further. It looked as if Herzog had the ball plenty of time, but Umps Eason said the runner wasn't tagged. Big fuss, much noise from the crowd and grand march by Frederick to the clubhouse. Miller subsequently scored on Simon's fourth hit.

Clifton Curtis opened the forlorn hope with a hit. It was [illegible] Jack Spratt was put on to run for him. Josh Clarke who was very anxious to get a triple and thus tie up Brother Fred's record for the day waited for two and three and then was called out on strikes, while Simon threw doubled up Spratt who had started for second on the deciding ball.

Fans After Umpire.

When it was all over, the bugs gathered on the field as if they were going to kill Mr. Eason. They surely did look wild and Mal was so frightened that he sauntered to his dressing room without accepting the kind offer of police protection.

George Gibson, Pittsburg's regular catcher, wasn't feeling very much elated over the victory. George is at present under suspension by President Lynch. He accompanied his mates to the park yesterday and proceeded to lose a ring with three valuable diamonds in it. He says he'll give real money to get it back.

the Red Sox to the ninth, with a margin of six runs against them.

Here Willett weakened and the Boston bats began their tattoo. With one out, Gardner and Speaker hit safely and Lewis' hard drive got away from Cobb, going for a homer. Engle and Wagner then hit safely and Willett was benched in favor of Works.

Williams' third hit of the day scored Engle, leaving the Red Sox only two runs to the bad. Carrigan was the second out, but Riggert, batting for Killilay, who had relieved Hall and had pitched fine ball for three innings, hit through Crawford for a triple, tieing things up.

Hooper hit to Delehanty, who fumbled, allowing Riggert to score the Red Sox eleventh run.

Wood went out to pitch the ninth. Bush's single and Cobb's double tied things up in the Tiger half, but Schmidt, batting for O'Leary with one out, was fanned by Wood, after the latter had intentionally passed Crawford and Delehanty, filling the bases.

Cobb lost his head, started for the plate, and was thrown out by Carrigan for a strange double play.

Mullin pitched the tenth for Detroit. Speaker made first on Delehanty's second boot. Purtell went in to run for him and Lewis sacrificed. He took third on Engle's infield out and scored on Wagner's fine single to centre.

A triple by Williams brought Wagner home and Wood made the margin of two runs good, striking out Schaller and Mullin and holding Stanage to an infield grounder.

The Boston infield played fine ball throughout, turning off two fine double plays, in each of which the inevitable Williams figured strongly. Score:

SPEAKER MAY NOT PLAY FOR 2 WEEKS; A NEW SOX CATCHER

President John I. Taylor of the Red Sox received a telegram last night from Manager Donovan at Detroit, saying that Tris Speaker's injury in yesterday's game was so serious that he may be out of the game for two weeks. Riggert is doing so well, however, that the Sox leaders think they have a capable substitute.

Owner Taylor yesterday purchased Catcher Cady of the Newark, N. J., Eastern League team. Cody is a big fellow and a great natural hitter. He will report next season.

The suggestion that Engle may be sent to first base and Yerkes to third, with the return of Wagner to the team, does not mean that the Red Sox powers are dissatisfied with Williams. It was said at American League headquarters last night Williams has improved daily in clouting the ball, and yesterday figured in several brilliant plays. The idea is to try an all round experiment in the infield, to see if the new quartet work even better than the old one. In such a case, Williams would go behind the bat.

CRIPPLED YANKEES LOSE TO CLEVELAND

Both Teams Use Brace of Pitchers in Great Batting Game.

CLEVELAND, O., May 13.—The Naps jumped on the crippled Highlanders today and bumped them to the tune of 12 to 7 in a farcical game. Quinn started to pitch, but he was found for six runs and six hits in the third and gave way to Brockett, who fared no better.

Krapp, the Naps spitball heaver, was wild, issuing eight passes, hitting one man and having two wild pitches. After filling the bases with none out in the eighth, he gave way to West. The Yanks played loosely afield, making seven errors, four of them within the fourth inning.

ATHLETICS SHUT OUT THE BROWNIES IN FINAL GAME

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 13.—The Athletics concluded their vaudeville performance here this afternoon, playing rings around the Browns and capturing the entire series. Little or no credit can be given them, as the task was an easy one and did not require championship ball to accomplish the results obtained. Unless a decided improvement occurs Detroit, Boston and New York will have easy sailing with the Wallace club also.

Five thousand disappointed fans witnessed the game and Plank eliminated the lonely home team without any effort whatsoever, while Lake was hit severely at intervals throughout the session, the score being 7 to 0.

Manager Mack says that warm weather will work wonders in his team and that he has no fear but that the Athletics will be in the running in due time.

SENATORS HUMBLE WHITE SOX IN WEIRD GAME, 11 TO 8

CHICAGO, May 13.—The Washington Senators won a wild and woolly game today and broke even with the White Sox in the series. The score was 11 to 6 in favor of McAleer's men.

The wildness of the Sox pitchers gave the Senators many openings. Lange and Scott handed out eleven passes. They also fanned eleven batsmen. It required two hours and a half to play the game. The score:

Waltham High Boys Find Errors Costly, Score 7 to 3.

By taking advantage of the errors of their opponents, the High School of Commerce nine won from Waltham High at the Blue's Park playground yesterday afternoon 7 to 3.

Waltham played ragged ball at times and was unable to find Phalen when hits were most needed. At other times the red and white players batted well, both teams getting ten hits apiece. The score:

SPRINGFIELD WINS FROM NEW BRITAIN

NEW BRITAIN, Ct., May 13.—New Britain lost to Springfield to-day, 7 to 3 in one of the poorest fielding exhibitions ever witnessed on the local grounds.

Four errors by the Aviators gave Springfield four runs in the first and the Ponies' three boots yielded only one run. The Ponies then bunched their hits and they counted for runs.

Outfielder Hoey, awarded by the National board to New Britain, occupied a place on the bench and will be used against his old team mates in Waterbury Sunday.

Duffy, Two Handed Haverhill Twirler Defeats Brockton

BROCKTON, May 13.—The leaders of the New England League were completely outclassed by the Haverhill team this afternoon 4 to 0.

The pitching of Duffy was directly responsible for Haverhill's win. Pitching with both right and left hands at various times, he had his opponents at his mercy. Brockton fought a hard game, but not a man reached second base in the entire game.

The features of the game were the sensational catches of Lonergan, who nailed a line drive from Pfeffer's [illegible] with his bare hand, and threw the runner out, and Stankard's catch of [illegible] line drive. Stankard also nailed the liner with his bare hand. Aubrey was the star for Haverhill both in the field and at the bat. The score:

WALLACE'S HIT WINS GAME FOR LYNN

LYNN, Mass., May 13.—"Lefty" Wallace can have anything he wants in this city after his home run that took victory away from Worcester to-day in the eighth after Burkett had apparently won the battle at Ocean Park. Wallace poled the ball over the right wall with the cushions stuffed and Lynn won, 5 to 4.

Up to that time Hale had the Ocean Park stars nibbling out of his hand. Worcester scored in the sixth and eighth on timely hitting and poor work by Callahan and Harrington. In the ninth outfielder Strands of Lynn turned in a startling one-hand running grab.

WHALERS WIN 6 TO 5 GAME FROM FALL RIVER TEAM

NEW BEDFORD, May 13.—Two thousand excited fans saw New Bedford defeat Fall River to-day, 6 to 5, after a rousing contest. The champions got to Reiger early in the game, scoring four runs in the third on five successive bingles, one a three-bagger by Maranville.

Errors by Merrill and two decisions by Umpire Stafford netted the Border City players three runs in the fourth, while McCrone's error, a base on balls and Reiger's scratch hit enabled the visitors to tie the score in the sixth. The Whalers scored the winning run in the seventh on Snyder's single and McCrone's double. Charlie Pruitt pitched a swell game, striking out the first two men in the ninth. Tommy Dowd was put out of the game in the sixth for protesting a decision. The score:

BUFFALO, May 13.—Buffalo made a chopping block out of Dale, the first pitcher sent in by Manager Collins of Providence to-day. Buffalo took most kindly to his curves and clouted the ball for eight runs while he remained on the mound. Maroney, who finished yesterday, came again and did excellent work.

Corridon was hit as often as his opponents, but managed to keep the hits as well spread out over the nine innings that but two runs resulted. The batting of Sharpe and Perry and the fielding of Rock and McDonald featured. Score.

POMFRET WINS TWO.

It's Crews Defeat Roxbury Latin Boys Over 1/4-Mile Course.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., May 13.—Pomfret School won two rowing races to-day from its old rival, the Roxbury Latin School. The first and second fours of each school raced, Pomfret winning by nine lengths the first crew race and twelve lengths the second. The races were over a mile and a quarter course on the Quinabog River. The Pomfret School coach is Richard Whittier, the former Yale crew captain. The line up:

Pomfret—Stroke, Pendleton; No. 3, Sizer, No. 2, Cotton; bow, R. Sizer; cox, Morgan.

Roxbury—Stroke, Winer; No. 3, Mosser, No. 22, Wendell, bow, Holden; cox, Hartwell.

In the second crew race the time was Pomfret, 6.25; Roxbury, 6.50.

The course was a mile and a quarter on the Quinabog River.

ST. MARK'S WINS, 6 TO 0.

Smith Allows Milton Only Three Hits.

The Milton Academy team was defeated at Milton yesterday by the fast St. Mark's boys, 6 to 0. The St. Mark's boys played together and showed up well against the Academy.

Milton could find Smith for only three hits and was unable to score. In the eighth inning Handy let down and the St. Mark's team added two more runs.

YALE FRESHMEN WIN FROM CRIMSON, 62-42

Yale '14, defeated Harvard '14, at the stadium in yesterday's meet, by a score of 62 to 42. Although after the first few events, there was no doubt that Yale would win, still the plucky spirit displayed by the Crimson contestants and the closeness of several events, made the meet one of the best ever pulled off between the fresh men classes of the two colleges.

Four new records for freshmen contests were established. In the 100 yards dash K. M. McClintock of Yale, who also won the 220 yards dash broke the record in the very fast time of ten seconds flat. The previous record often one fifth seconds was made two years ago by Thatcher of Yale.

Another Yale runner, J. H. Stewart bettered the record of fifty two fifths seconds for the 440 yards dash, breaking the tape in fifty seconds flat. McClintock demonstrated his superior ability as one of the best freshmen Yale has produced, by also winning the 220 yards dash in a whirlwind finish in the record time of twenty two and one fifth seconds.

Harvard won the 120-yard high hurdles and the 220-yard low hurdles mainly through the excellent work of Jackson the fast colored runner, who broke the record for the 220 event, but was not allowed to claim it as he knocked over the third hurdle. His time for the event, 25 1-5 seconds, was two-fifths of a second better than the record made five years ago by Robbins of Yale, which record, however, stills stands.

Yale was particularly strong in the field events, winning four out of five. The pole vault especially was a walk-over. Three Yale men tied for first at 9 feet 8 inches. This gave Yale eight points and in the elimination contest between them to see who should get the prizes, Cunningham cleared the bar at 10 feet, 6 inches and Suscombe made 10 feet, 3 inches. Cunningham's jump was a foot higher than any of the Harvard men.

Almost the same thing occurred in the high jump, when two Yale men, Foss and Walcott, tied for first place at 5 feet 7, and Foss afterwards cleared at 5 feet, breaking the record made four years ago, by an inch and a quarter. Altogether it was a Yale day both at New Haven and the Stadium.

The first event, the 120-yard high hurdles, was run in two heats. In the first, T. O. Freeman of Harvard was first and R. J. Davidson of Yale second. The time was 17 seconds. The second heat was between two members of the Crimson team and was only run to qualify. In the finals Freeman was first, Jackson second, and Davidson of Yale third. The time 16 1-5 seconds was fast.

The 100-yard dash brought out a sensation in the win of McClintock in 10 seconds flat. W. A. Barron of Harvard was second and J. W. Howard of Yale, third.

The next event, the one-mile run was exciting. The winner, M. C. Dowling, led all the way till the final lap, when Tugman of Harvard passed him and for a time raised Harvard's hopes. At the final turn Dowling, by a burst of speed that was unexpected, flashed to the front again and broke the tape about a yard in advance. W. M. Tugman was second and H. P. Brady of Yale, third.

Yale established a new record in the 440-yard dash through the fast work of J. H. Stewart, who won in 50 seconds flat. W. A. Barron of Harvard was second, and L. B. Platt of Yale, third.

The 880 yards run brought another victory for Yale and another record. H. J. Norris was the winner and his team-mate, C. M. Baxter, was second. F. H. Storms of Harvard was third. The time two minutes and two fifths seconds, was fast. In this race Norris and Baxter gave an exhibition of team running and jockeying for places that was so clever that it brought applause from the Harvard rooters.

The next event, the 220 yards low hurdles, proved that Harvard's colored runner, Jackson, is to be reckoned with in the meets to come. Although his time of 25 1-5 seconds was not allowed on account of knocking over one of the hurdles, he is entitled to all the credit of a new record. Second place went to Freeman of Harvard and third to M. W. Scoville of Yale.

The record for the next event, the 220 yards dash 22 1-5 seconds, which McClintock equalled has stood for six years. Reynolds, Harvard, was second and Howard of Yale third.

The summary:

120-Yard High Hurdles—First heat won by T. O. Freeman, second R. J. Davidson, Yale. Time 17 seconds. Second heat won by A. L. Jackson, Harvard, second K. L. Reynolds, Harvard. Time 18 4-5 seconds.

HARVARD HAS EASY TIME BEATING BROWN

Crowd of Rooters From Providence Is Dismayed at Soldiers' Field.

There was one young massacre on Soldiers Field yesterday afternoon and in this massacre Harvard evened up all scores against the erstwhile troublesome Brunonians, the Crimson emerging the winner over Brown 11 to 1.

It was a fine day for the Harvard batsmen and a very, very poor day for the Brown twirlers, no less than four of them going onto the mound, three of them succumbing in rather rapid order.

None of the Brown pitchers were anything of a puzzle to the Harvard men and, the latter pounded the horsehide all over the lots, and Brown nobly aided Harvard in rolling up a score by contributing six errors.

Harvard started the affray in the second inning when on a triple, and three singles, an error by Staff and a wild throw by Snell four runs came in. Harvard did not slip up again until the eighth inning, when they failed to score. Three more runs came over in the seventh for Harvard when Pitcher Clark handed out two bases on balls, hit two men and permitted a three-bagger and a single.

SILK O'LOUGHLIN'S MAXIMS FOR GOOD BASEBALL UMPIRE

"Be boss of the diamond."

"Rule with an iron hand."

"Think in advance of a play."

"Study the delivery of every pitcher."

"Remember that ball players are human."

"Learn the peculiarities of each player."

"Maintain dignity, and do not permit unnecessary arguments."

"Be careful before making a decision. It isn't good to change one."

"Remember that even umpires are not infallible."

CUSHING DEFEATED BY PHILLIPS-ANDOVER

ANDOVER, May 13.—Phillips-Andover defeated Cushing Academy 7 to 4 on Brothers field this afternoon. Ingalls, who pitched for the visitors had fourteen strikeouts, but was pounded hard with men on bases and received such poor support that Andover piled up five runs in the fifth inning.

Mahan who started to pitch for Andover was rather wild but Ripley held the visitors well, allowing but two hits and one run in six innings.

Baseball Ballads

"John Bourbon, Pitcher"

By William F. Kirk

THEY tell me that Joe Wood can pitch like a fiend
But many long years before Woody was weaned
I was pitching to batters and good batters, too
Kelley and Rusie and all the old crew.
Red Sockalexis, the Indian star,
Breitenstein, Clancy, McGill and McGarr
Joe Wood a pitcher? Well, yes, he may be
But where in the world is a pitcher like me?

MY name is John Bourbon; I'm old and yet young,
I cannot keep track of the victims I've stung.
I've studied their weakness, humored their whims,
Muddled their eyesight and weakened their limbs,
Bloated their faces and dammed up their veins,
Rustled their joints and beclouded their brains.
Joe Wood a pitcher? Well, yes, he may be,
But where in the world is a pitcher like me?

I HAVE pitched to the stars of our national game,
I have pitched them to ruin and pitched them to shame
They laughed when they faced me, so proud of their strength
Not knowing, poor fools, I would get them at length.
I have pitched men off pinnacles scaled in long years,
I have pitched those they loved into oceans of tears.
Joe Wood a pitcher? Well, yes, he may be,
But where in the world is a pitcher like me?

ROXBURY HIGH LOSE TO DORCHESTER HIGH

Dorchester High's baseball team had little trouble in defeating the Roxbury High school, in a slugfest at the Dunbar avenue grounds, Dorchester, yesterday afternoon, by a score of 13 to 1.

Fraser, Dorchester's clever little second sacker, out of four times at the bat made three hits, one a two bagger. Brennan started the game for the Dorchester team, but Coach John O'Reilly took him out after the sixth inning to save his arm, he being relieved by Benson, a second string man who made the Roxbury boys reach all over the rubber for his sharp curves. He struck out nine men.

Van Ulum, Roxbury's left fielder, carried off the fielding honors of the game, catching four difficult flies, all hard drives to the fence, one in particular after a long hard run. Wieseman, Roxbury's pitcher, led for his team with the stick, making the longest hit of the contest for a three-sacker. The score:

HAPPY'S TEAM WINS FOURTH GAME OF YEAR

In Chelsea, yesterday the Happy Newsboy's baseball team won their fourth game of the season, beating the Spartan A. C. of Chelsea by the score of 11 to 7.

Brockman, the star twirler of the Newsboys' has won three games this season and Rass, the other slab artist has yet to lose a game, as he won the opening game on the 19th of April. Powers who covers the initial bag is playing a whirlwind game. In yesterday's game he was all over the field, making plays that would have done credit to Hal Chase. F. Davis, the backstop for Happy's team, is playing such a swell game that many New England League scouts are watching his work.

Manager Happy is [illegible] his boys will win the championship [illegible] year and he will celebrate by blowing his "oits" to a thousand on a plate.

ARLINGTON WINS LEAGUE BATTLE

Beat Stoneham High 7-5 in the Mystic Valley League Series.

In a Mystic Valley League game played at Arlington between Arlington High and Stoneham High, the former was victorious by the score of 7 to 5. Both teams hit the ball well but Arlington's first three runs were the result of a long home run by "Bulger" Lowe. Trainor made several sensational stops of hard hit balls in the shortfield and retired his men. Sweet played a good all round game for Stoneham and was forced to catch after Patten's retirement in the fourth inning with a split hand.

ENGLISH HIGH LOSER.

Beaten By Haverhill by a 6 to 4 Score.

HAVERHILL, May 13.—Haverhill High won its seventh straight victory this afternoon, defeating Boston English High, 6 to 4. High-grade twirling by Malcolm who fanned sixteen men, and wretched support accorded Brannan gave Haverhill the game. Brannan did well on the slab, but the visitors went to pieces with men on the sacks. Malcolm let up in the ninth, when two singles, a pass and an error gave English three tallies. Maguire poled a long triple to left field. With a man on second in the seventh Goodman made a remarkable catch off Brickett, nailing it near the fence. The score:

EVERETT BEATS CHELSEA, 6 TO 1

Murray, Everett Freshman, Pitches, and Earned Good Shut-Out.

Everett High School took another game yesterday afternoon by defeating Chelsea High in an interesting contest on the Everett High School athletic field, 6 to 1. Murray, the Everett freshman pitcher deserved a shut-out, holding down the opponents to five scattered hits, and striking out 13 men, but a glaring error by Brickley, followed a short time later by a similar one by Hovie, enabled Cox to make Chelsea's lone tally. For six and a half innings the game was one of the closest seen here this season. In the last of the seventh Everett began a batting feat and by means of five hits, two bases on balls and one player being hit by a pitched ball made six runs.

"NUF CEDS" BEATEN.

Bay Views Take Close Game by Score of 4 to 3.

The Bay View team played errorless ball kept up its winning streak yesterday by defeating the "Nuf Ced" McGreavy's team 4 to 3 at the Locust street grounds before 1,1000 spectators. The "Nuff Ceds" presented a strong team on the field, but Judd Logan's boys were there with the speed and good baseball and pulled out the game on six hits.

The Bay View team played errorless ball and at times did some sensational playing. Croven, shortstop for the losing team, played a great game and showed his worth as a fine fielder. Morrissey, Blowers and Walsh put up a good game for the South Boston team.

Conly, on the mound for the Logan team was in the best of condition, and held the Roxbury team down to two hits. Hay pitched good enough ball to beat almost any team, allowing six hits and fanning nine men. Score.

MECHANICS LOSE, 12 TO 11.

Drop Annual Battle to Salem High School.

SALEM, May 13.—In a batfest at Bertram Field this afternoon Mechanic Arts lost its annual game to Salem High. There was heavy hitting on both nines, doubles and triplets being quite common. An infield fly caused the visitors lots of trouble. The umpire failed to call the play, this confusing the base runners. Coach Matthews protested, but to no avail. The score:

The speedy baseball team representing the Seminole Club triumphed over the Westland A. C. by the score of 5 to 3 in a nineteen-inning game at the Randolph Street Playgrounds, Roslindale, yesterday afternoon. The game was one of the greatest battles waged on an amateur diamond this year.

The Westlands started the scoring in the second inning, when two runners were sent scampering across the home plate. The Seminole Club tied up the score in the third on some fine hitting. It was nip and tuck until the ninth when each team again tallied once.

For the next nine innings neither team was able to score. In the nineteenth Johnson, who had pitched great ball for the Westlands, weakened and the Seminole Club scored two runs. Score by innings:

SOMERVILLE WINS GAME.

Defeats Rindge in Easy Fashion by 9 to 3 Score.

Somerville High experienced little difficulty in defeating Rindge Manual yesterday afternoon at Broadway Field, Somerville. The final score of the game was Somerville 9, Rindge 3. The wearers of the red and blue played a rattling good game from start to finish, and were never in danger of defeat. Rindge put up a very poor fielding game, which was the cause of Somerville's large score. The score:

MELROSE HIGH WINS IN WALKOVER GAME

Cheissong's Home Run the Longest Ever Made on the Grounds.

Melrose High increased its lead in the Suburban League championship race by defeating Malden at the Malden Athletic Field, yesterday afternoon, 10 to 3. At no time in the game was a victory for Melrose in doubt, for the Melrose players made more runs in the opening inning than Malden scored in the entire game.

Cheissong's home run, a long drive over the centre field fence, was the first time such a hit has been made in the field. This put the game on ice for Melrose.

Cram pitched his usual classy ball, and was backed up by the team in true professional style. The summary:

DUAL MEET WON BY GREEN'S FRESHMEN

Defeat Worcester Academy on Track and Field by 65-43 Score.

WORCESTER, May 13.—Dartmouth freshmen cleaned up Worcester Academy this afternoon in a dual athletic meet on Gaskill Field. The Hanover youngsters made sixty-five points, while the local athletes made forty-three. The Dartmouth boys captured seven firsts out of the twelve events on the card. The academy team won the 100-yard dash, high and broad jump and shot-put. Dartmouth took all three places in the 120 high hurdles, O'Leary, Gillis and Estep finishing first, second and third, respectively.

The feature event was the one-mile run, with Marceau and Day of Dartmouth and Bosworth of the academy neck and neck up to the last lap, when Marceau forged ahead and finished with a three-yard lead over Bosworth. Whitney, captain of the local team, won the sixteen-pound shot put, pushing the ball 42 feet 10¼ inches. Summary:

100 yards dash—Won by Coe, Worcester Academy; Ingersoll, Dartmouth, second; Wiley, Dartmouth, third. Time—10 3-5s.

880 yards run—Won by Hayward, Dartmouth; Burke, Worcester Academy, second; Smith, Dartmouth, third. Time—2m. 6 1-5s.

120 yards high hurdles—Won by Cleary, Dartmouth; Gillis, Dartmouth, second; Estep, Dartmouth, third. Time—15s.

One mile run—Won by Marceau, Dartmouth; Bosworth, Worcester Academy, second; Day, Dartmouth, third. Time—4m. 35 3-5s.

Pole vault—Won by Clark, Dartmouth; Whitney, Worcester Academy, second; Palmer, Dartmouth, third. Height—10 feet.

HARVARD BEATS HOBART.

Lacrosse Team Wins Easy Victory by 6 to 0 Score.

GENEVA, N. Y., May 13.—By fast aggressive playing and superior stick work the Harvard lacrosse team defeated Hobart 6 to 0 this afternoon. Harvard put the locals on the defensive at the start and by playing a fast aggressive game at all times won out.

In the first half Hobart was able to hold her own and held the visitors to one score, that being made by Fritts.

Fritts negotiated two more while Blackett scored two and Gustafson one in the second half.

ANDERSON WINS PUNT.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., May 13.—Anderson, 1912, the former Minnesota half back, won the Yale contest for punting which to-day closed the annual Spring football work. His best kick was 53½ yards. Spalding, 1913, was second with 51 yards and Bourne, 1912, came third with 49 yards.

In the contest for drop kicks McDevitt, 1912 guard last year, won, getting five goals out of six tries; Sharon, 1912, came next with four out of six; and Campbell, 1913, was third with three out of six. Silver cups were given the winners.

BLOOD POISON

If you have rash, copper colored spots, aching bones, mucous patches, severe continued headaches, falling hair, ulcers, [illegible] it fine to know that there are records of thousands of cases where these exaggerated symptoms have disappeared within twelve to forty-eight hours after the administration of "606." This remedy is now being introduced as Salvarsan, which name is registered in the U. S. Patent Office. Guaranteed under the Pure Food and Drugs Act, Serial No. 2,783. Each package bears the signature of Prof. Ehrlich in red ink. It can be administered by a physician in the privacy of the home. We can, however, make arrangements so that it can be given by a reliable specialist in Boston in accordance with the instructions of Prof. Dr. Ehrlich and approved practice. Courtney Picks Brains to Beat Brawn

Famous Coach Declares That Honesty Is to Be Considered Before Ability in Choosing the Men for College Crews

For Men in Good Condition, Rowing Is the Most Beneficial of Exercises; Sure Signs Show Physical Weakness

SOME COURTNEY ROWING MAXIMS.

"For a young man in condition there is no more beneficial exercise than rowing."

"Brains are more essential than brawn, and honesty is to be considered before ability."

"The mastery of the stroke is a science."

"Men in training must have no stimulating liquors or drugs."

"The amount of training necessary is in direct proportion to the length of the race."

"I prefer three-mile races in colleges. Any oarsman can be trained to row four miles without danger, but his university work or his training must suffer."

By CHARLES E. COURTNEY.

Written exclusively for the Boston Sunday American by the famous coach of the Cornell crews and the foremost master of oarsmen in America.

IT was only a few days before a big Poughkeepsie regatta. Cornell had an ordinarily good crew squad, but there was one of the men who I did not believe was in condition for his race. Calling the medical examiner aside, I said

"Doctor, there is something wrong with that man. I don't believe he is in condition."

"I consider him perfectly fit to go into the race," said the doctor. "I have examined him carefully and there is nothing the matter with him."

A few days later the man rowed in the four-oared race. At the end of the first mile he collapsed, and the crew did not finish. Of the five hundred and more undergraduates who have rowed in intercollegiate races since I have been connected with the Cornell navy, this was the only man who ever showed signs of collapse in a Cornell boat. Never before or since have I allowed a man to compete against my own better judgment.

There are unmistakable signs that always appear early in the training of a man who is out of condition, and that man should never be allowed to row, whether the stethoscope shows him to have a weak heart or not. Just what these conditions are, I cannot explain. It may be that while rowing on the machines, the lips get a little white, or the face flushes peculiarly.

Scores Dropped Early in Training.

Every year at Cornell scores of men who register for the navy are dropped early in the training, not because they might not make good men for the crew, but because the light Winter work on the machines shows that hard rowing would be dangerous to their own health. The elimination takes place long before training can have any injurious effects, and there is almost no possibility of an unfit man getting into a Cornell race.

For the young man in condition there is no more beneficial exercise than rowing. It not only develops him physically and gives him a stronger constitution, but it counts in his mental and moral growth as well.

Each year some two hundred and fifty Cornell undergraduates register for the crew. The elimination process extends over a period of five months. This number must be cut to twenty-eight men—three eights and a four—for the actual races, and the doctrine of the "survival of the fittest" applies.

In the final selection brains are more essential than brawn, and honesty is to be considered before ability. An ignoramus may make a powerful pugilist, but he can never be an oarsman. The rhythmical manipulation of the sweep and sliding seat requires a technical appreciation found only in the man with the well-developed brain. The stroke must be worked out with as much precision as a problem in geometry. Its mastery is a science. Therefore, I have found by experience that the best students make the best oarsmen.

Perfect Physical Development Needed.

In picking a crew man from the physical point of view, I look for the perfectly developed all-round man. The fellow with some parts abnormally developed at the expense of others—the muscular monstrosity—has no place in rowing. His presence in a boat is the weak spot when the machine is put to the final test. Every muscle has its function, and that function must be well performed to have an evenly balanced crew.

But ahead of physical perfection and even ahead of brain power, I would place honesty as an essential requisite for the oarsman. I have no place in a Cornell boat for a man who would crib in an examination. For he who will cheat, even in little things, cannot be trusted in the crucial moment of a great race. Shirking in an eight-oared boat is easy, the temptation is often great, and it is sometimes hard even for the trained eye to readily single out just the man who is not honestly doing his share.

Candidates for the crews are put to work on the rowing machines in the gymnasium soon after the Christmas vacation, and there, for about ten minutes each day, are instructed in the rudiments of the stroke. I am not a believer in hard Winter training. While on the machines the candidates are watched carefully and the task of grading them into combinations begins. By the time we can get out on the water there are left not more than nine or ten eights, including the freshmen, the remainder having either been cut or having resolved to pursue some less arduous form of student activity.

Work Is Increased on the Water.

Once on the water the time for rowing is increased to twenty or thirty minutes a day, and later it is lengthened to an hour, usually from 6 to 7 p. m.

Soon after the actual rowing begins several of the most promising candidates are taken to the training table and are expected to observe regular training rules from that time. This merely means that they are to live naturally, observing the ordinary well-known rules for the correct life. They get well-cooked, plain food, and plenty of it. Cake and pie are about the only articles tabooed, and even these are not harmful if the fellows would be satisfied with one portion. Up to a few years ago there were always cake and pie on the table, but my attention was at length called to the amount consumed by some of the men. I watched one fellow in particular. There were two kinds of pie, apple and pumpkin. He ate a piece of each. Next day there were apple, pumpkin and lemon, and he had all three kinds. The variety increased until one day I saw him eat five large pieces of pie at one meal. There has never been a bit of pastry on the crew table since.

At no time in training are the men given or allowed to use stimulating liquors or drugs. I did not use them myself in my own training, and I believe they have no place in the development of an athlete.

Not the "Old Man" Referred To.

An article entitled "The Strategist in the Shell," in a New York newspaper April 23, probably did more harm to rowing as an intercollegiate sport than anything else I have ever seen published. It was, to say the least, misleading. The writer told of an incident where strychnine was given to three oarsmen by the coach just before a Poughkeepsie race. The coach in the story is referred to as the "Old Man," and since its publication I have received several letters from friends and former crew men who took the article to refer to me and asking me to deny it. The "Old Man" used in reference to a crew coach is most often applied to myself or to Ellis Ward of Pennsylvania. For myself I can say that for the twenty-eight years I have been teaching boys to row not one of them ever sat in a shell under the influence of any drug. Further, I know Ellis Ward well enough to be certain that those are not the training methods he employs.

I have heard of cases where football men and track men were drugged before important contests, but I believe that the custom is not now so popular as it was once. Any coach who will drug his men should be serving time instead of training athletes. The system is pernicious, despicable and should be made criminal.

Furthermore, there ought to be no occasion for the use of stimulants. An athlete in good condition and properly trained should not "go stale." If he does, it is the fault of the coach.

Training Depends Upon Distance.

The amount of training necessary in order to get a crew on racing edge is in direct proportion to the length of the race. That is to say, only about one-half the work necessary in preparation for a four-mile race will be required in training for a two-mile race. Although I do not believe in the four-mile race for college crews, I am not in sympathy with writers who expostulate about the "deadly fourth mile." Any oarsman can be trained into condition to row four miles without injury to his health, but with an undergraduate oarsman, either his university work or his training must suffer. A student cannot attend to both properly, and as we cannot afford to have the four-mile event result disastrously to the crew or to the oarsman himself, his university work must be the department to be slighted.

I have never seen a four-mile race where the outcome would have been different had the race been for three miles. Long distance rowing races are not often won or lost in the last mile. It would take twenty-five per cent. less of the student's time to prepare for a three-mile race preferable for college oarsmn. After all, boys come to college primarily to get an education and rowing is not an essential part of that education—it should always be a secondary consideration.

MEET AT DARTMOUTH WON BY HEBRON BOYS

HANOVER, N. H., May 13.—Hebron Academy of Hebron, Me., won the Dartmouth College interscholastic track meet this afternoon, with a total of 29 points. The scores of the other schools was as follows: Tilton Academy 18, Lawrence, Mass., High School 14; Colby Academy 13, Concord, N. H., High School 8, Kimball High School, Newport, Vt., 8, Worcester, Mass., South High School 7, Worcester Classical High School 5, Stevens High School, Claremont, N. H., 3; Wesleyan Academy 1, Dorchester, Mass., High School 1, Manchester, N. H., High School 1.

Llewelyn of Colby broke the Dartmouth interscholastic record in the 100-yard dash, doing it in 10 seconds flat. Bebber of Hebron tried for a record in the pole vault at 12 feet 2½ inches but failed. Wins in the pole vault and broad jump gave the meet to Hebron after Colby had them tied. The summary:

FARRINGTON BEATEN BY BROWN AT GOLF

Winner of Country Club Tourney Plays His Best; Loser Not Up to Game.

Rodney W. Brown of the Meadowbrook Golf Club, Reading, won the Country Club annual Spring tournament yesterday afternoon from H. P. Farrington of Woodland, by 4 and 3 in a match where the victor was right at the top of his game, and the vanquished was not playing well at all. Brown had reached the finals by defeating L. S. Bigelow of the home club in the morning in a match where neither player scored well, while Farrington put Henry W. Stucklen, the State amateur champion, out in a match that went to the nineteenth hole.

Brown is considered the longest driver in Massachusetts and can stay with the best in this country when playing well. He, out, edly in the afternoon he drove a fair [illegible]. It was an open question after Farrington had played [illegible]. At the outset of the final contest Brown took the first three holes in 4 each, which was one under bogey at the first and third holes and had the match three up at the very outset. At the fourth and fifth he was 4 and 5, respectively, which is just bogey for these holes and Farrington secured a half in each instance. The next three went to Brown in just bogey figures of 4 3 5 4 in 6 on the long ninth made him six up at the turn. Farrington won the tenth in 5 to 4, but promptly lost the next two where Brown was 4 4 under bogey for these holes, and the match ended.

This was the first event outside of the Leslie Cup matches that Brown has ever been a serious competitor in, and his victory was a popular one. Farrington has been the runner up in the last three tourneys held at the Country Club, and on his pathway to the finals has played some very good matches. This seems, however, to be the end of his capabilities and he is known now at the Country Club as a perpetual runner up. Summary:

Semi-finals—Rodney Brown, Meadowbrook, defeated L. S. Bigelow, Country, 5—3; H. P. Farrington, Woodland, defeated H. W. Stucklen, Brae Burn, 1 up 19 holes.

Finals—Brown defeated Farrington, 7—[illegible].

BOGEY UNEQUALLED.

Merrill an dTash Tie for Honors on Bellevue Golf Links.

Handicap play versus bogey was on the card at the Bellevue Golf Links in Melrose yesterday afternoon, no player equaling the bogey. C. G. Merrill and A. L. Tash tied with one down for the best score and the former won the toss up for the trophy.

C. G. Merrill and A. L. Tash, 1 down; Harold C. Morse and Clifton Fletcher, 2 down; H. P. W[illegible] and [illegible], 3 [illegible]; [illegible] M. Cleveland, [illegible], 5 down; Paul [illegible]. A. Hutchins and [illegible]. No other cards were turned in.

BROWN LOSES AT TENNIS.

TWO RECORDS GO IN DEDHAM SCHOOL MEET

Benson Makes New Mile Mark and 220-Yard Record Also Goes.

Two high school records were broken yesterday afternoon at the inter-class meet of the Dedham High and the field and track events of the grammar schools at Stone Park, Dedham. Henry Benson of the high school, carried off the honors in the mile by breaking the record of 4 min. and 49 seconds, and making a new record of 4 min. and 46 seconds. Charles Rappaun also went some, for in the 220-yard dash he lowered the record by two seconds, the record being 23 4-5, and his time was 23 2-5.

The score—Class '12, 30; class '11, 20; class '14, 8 (all made by Robert Schulz).

In the events of the grammar schools Ames won the meet and the Oakdale School won the cup for the relay race.

The summary of high school meet:

GREAT FISHING SEASON.

Boston Anglers Are Off for the Maine Woods.

Fishermen are bustling out their equipment so that they may soon bury themselves in the quiet serenity of the Maine woods. Hundreds of them are now there, others are on their way, and the rest will soon be going.

This season should be a good one for the inland fisherman. Never before has the early outlook been so bright. The fish appear to be crowding the lakes, ponds, and streams to overflowing. They are patiently waiting for the city fisherman to get them with his tempting bait.

The fishing down in Maine is the best ever, according to the reports that have reached this city from there. The ice went out of Mooselucmaguntic, Moosehead, and the Rangeley Lakes Friday, and hundreds of anglers are now flocking in small sized armies to the banks of these lakes. The rivers, ponds and small streams have been free from ice for the past three weeks.

There has been ideal fishing weather all week. The anglers at Grand Lakes, Washington County, Me., have had splendid success. Old guides say that all early season records have been broken by the catches made thus far at Grand Lake. Professor W. P. White of New York landed the largest togue caught this season. It weighed 21¾ pounds.

The following are Boston parties: Dr. Webber, Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Powers and W. W. Rogers, twenty-eight salmon, eight trout, three togue for the party. Augustine Wade, nine salmon, one trout, three togue; William Lhoreth, seven salmon, two weighing 5½ pounds each; Dr. Kleinham, eleven salmon; Carl Stone, eight salmon, one togue; Dr. Gardner, twelve salmon. Andrew Ryan, sixteen salmon, two trout.

WALSH MEETS DELMONT.

Youngsters Will Try to Settle Their Old Differences.

Boxing followers who revel in fast, clever pugilism will have a chance to enthuse at the Armory A. A. Tuesday evening, when Jimmy Walsh and Al Delmont meet for twelve rounds. Both are Boston boys and have a large following. The boys have been the greatest rivals for the past year. They met before at the Armory and the bout was called a draw although the majority thought that Jimmy was best.

Three preliminaries have been arranged with Kid Scaler of Spokane meeting Tom Foley of South Boston for eight rounds, and Harold Walker of England and Jack Munice meeting for six rounds and Mike Mulcahy of Worcester and Young Roche of the North End going on for the same distance.

LANG BEATS LESTER.

SYDNEY, Australia, May 13.—Tommy Burns' new "white hope," Jack Lester, came to grief this afternoon when Bill Lang, whom Sam Langford recently defeated, was given a decision over him in the sixth round. Lester broke his wrist in this round and the referee stopped the fight, which was scheduled for twenty rounds. Lang was the favorite.

Shortstop Is Hardest Job — Herzog Points Out Why

Fast Rustler Infielder Gives Some Valuable Pointers on How to Play the Busiest Position in the Baseball Infield

Player Has More Opportunities in That Place Than Any Other; Man Must Be Very Fast and Accurate and Have Brains

CHARLEY HERZOG
CLASSY SHORTSTOP
OF THE RUSTLERS

By R. W. LARDNER.

A FEW seasons ago major league shortstops of real class were as scarce as orange groves in Maine. There were Hans Wagner, and Hans Wagner, and Hans Wagner, and, possibly, Turner and Wallace, and then Hans Wagner again. You couldn't get more than four fans to agree that any-one else could be spoken of in the same breath with this trio, most of which was Wagner.

This is one of the peculiarities of baseball. For four or five years some certain position will be well stocked with capable performers, only to suffer a dearth of good men during the four or five years following.

Just now there are as many good shortstops in the two major leagues as there are occupants of any other position.

In fact, almost each one of the sixteen teams has either a classy man in that berth or a youngster of great promise.

The two leagues are even in the matter of tried and true short field men, there being five to each circuit. The American has Wallace of the Browns, still a fast and polished player; McBride of Washington, one of the best in the business; Wagner of Boston, Bush of Detroit and Barry of the Athletics. The National boasts of the great Pittsburg Wagner, Tinker of the Cubs, Mike Doolan of the Phillies, Bridwell of the Giants and last, but not least, Charley Herzog of our own Rustlers.

Some New Ones are Shining.

The six clubs which are trying men for the place are confident that they have picked up good ones. Roger Bresnahan has a fast youngster in Arnold Hauser. There is plenty of speed to this youth, but, of course, he is still shy on experience and hasn't yet become a dangerous man at bat. Manager Dahlen of the Dodgers thinks he has a comer in Bert Tooley. Clark Griffith possesses Tom Downey and Dave Altizer, neither of whom is exactly young. Tom is steady if not brilliant and Dave is a sort of "in and outer."

Cleveland, in the American, is placing a good deal of faith in Olson, the Pacific Coast youth. The White Sox are still experimenting. Russell Blackburne's injuries have put him out of the running temporarily. Lee Tannehill is still the most reliable man Duffy has for the place. Rollie Zeider works satisfactorily at times and young Corhan from the Western League has his admirers.

Hal Chase is using Ote Johnson. This athlete is anything but graceful and he doesn't appear a bit too fast, but the big league school may educate him up to the standard and he will be kept if he can hit up to his minor league records.

The polished dependable shortstop has lots of things to attend to outside his own position. In many instances, he gives the signs which govern the entire defense. When an intelligent pitcher is working, it is usually he who flashes the catcher's signals to the outfielders, so that they may know how, when and where to shift for various batsmen.

The good shortstops of the present day are the men who "think baseball," even when they aren't playing it. They are the men who are constantly planning something new to try on unsuspecting opponents, the men who introduce the plays which are subsequently put into general usage.

Such a man is Charley Herzog of the Rustlers, fondly known as "Buck" in the wilds of Maryland. "Herzy" is a born infielder and would make good in any position around the diamond. But short field is his proper sphere, simply because there he can use his baseball brains and his speed to best advantage.

Herzog Is a Good One.

Herzog has mechanical ability in abundance. He also has the other kind. He is a reliable batsman, but would be sure of a regular infield berth if he couldn't hit a balloon with a bass fiddle, because his defensive ability would offset any batting weakness. The fact that he can hit is just an additional thing for which Manager Tenney should be grateful.

"Buck" can cover ground either to the right or left, can come up on a slow hit ball with the best of them, can make the long or the short throw with accuracy, can throw without recovering from an awkward position, can take throws and put them on the runner at second base and can think quickly enough to pull pitchers out of bad holes when the mechanical shortstop would see only the obvious play.

"I am learning something new about this position every day," confesses "Herzy." "From the fans' point of view the four positions composing the infield are very much alike in most respects. Interview a player of any of the major league clubs on the subject and he will say each is entirely different from the others and each is a position in itself, requiring constant practice, thought and many hours of hard work.

"As utility man during the season of 1908, while a member of the Giants, I was called on to play every position in the makeup of the fielding end of the infield, so I speak from experience when I say that none requires the ability, quick action and thought demanded of the shortstop.

"To begin with, the shortstop must possess a good throwing arm. This will enable him to play a deep short field, a feature that will help his team wonderfully. He is then capable not only of fielding hits behind the third baseman and over second base, but also is in much better position to take care of short flies, which are beyond the third baseman and out of reach of the outfielders.

A Good Arm Is Necessary.

"A good arm is also a big help on long hits past the outfielders. Often the occasion demands that the shortstop shall act as a relay between centre and left and the plate. This requires a good arm and a true one, for the plays at the plate are repeatedly the turning or deciding plays of the game.

"Too long runners at second is one of the details of a shortstop's work in which he must be proficient. This requires a man who is fast and able to judge distance quickly. Many plays are lost by a shortstop's inability to shift his body to meet the craft employed by an opposing player who is sliding into second.

"Runners have perfected numerous slides designed to outwit the player at the second base end, the fadeaway slide being the most used. For this reason, it is my opinion that the shortstop should be the man used to make the play at second on the man sliding into the bag. He can watch the runner not only from his position, but the shortstop is the man to take the throw from the catcher, while the second baseman must invariably make the play at an angle.

"My experience has been—with a good catcher to give the ball in ample time—that I can make the runner slide to the bag in any way I choose. So I repeat that the shortstop is the man to take the throw, for in almost all cases he has the advantage over the second baseman.

"Slow hit balls past the pitcher and over second base are things a shortstop must be able to play well. Left handed batters will soon take advantage of a shortstop when they learn that he is weak on this particular play.

"It is my advice to those who contemplate playing shortstop to make the play on a slow hit ball always on a dead run. You gain nothing by slowing up, for the ball will then 'play you.' Always take a chance and play the ball fast, relying on your good judgment and accuracy in throwing the ball to first to complete the play. Don't be discouraged if you continually miss the ball in the beginning, for it is one of the hardest things to learn and something that requires constant practice.

Accuracy a Big Factor.

"Accuracy in throwing is a big factor in playing shortstop, but the most important asset is the ability to throw from out of position. A shortstop who can throw from all angles, in every direction and from all positions, has reached his goal and has developed and mastered the hardest task connected with his work. Furthermore, he has become invaluable to his team and has earned the right to be classed as one of the stars of the national game.

"I have played them all, but I would rather play shortstop than any other position. More is expected of you, you are required to do more, by far, than any other player on the infield, you have the privilege of going everywhere on a play and you're never out of place. If you can hit, too, so much the better.

"Who can blame me for wanting to play shortstop on a big league team and hiring a man to run my farm?"

third place, led from the start and won handily.

Chisholm had the high hurdles well in hand from the first and in the 220 Bleistein narrowly wrested first from Snyder.

Four Yale men led all the Harvard field in this event. Kelly of Harvard ran a wonderful race in the quarter-mile and led his field five yards.

Farrar of Yale did a point better than the forecasts gave him in taking second.

Four Harvard men finished first in the half mile, Jacques of Harvard jogging home in the lead. He also won the mile, making his total score of ten points, the greatest of any individual competitor in the meet.

Four Harvard men scampered home first in the two-mile run, Withington of Harvard leading the field by nearly 20 yards.

120 yard hurdles—First heat, won by G. A. Chisholm, Yale; second, J. B. Cummings, Harvard; time 16 4-5s. Second heat—Won by J. G. Lewis, Harvard, second, Charles Larkin, Yale, time, 16 1-5s.

GINGER B. WINS HONORS.

Lowers Colors of Mixedwood at Wakefiled-Reading Track.

WAKEFIELD, May 13.—Ginger B., the bay mare, owned and driven by W. R. Pierce, lowered the colors of Mixedwood, the Lynn horse, who for the past two Saturdays has carried off the honors at the Quannapowitt Driving Club's matinee races now being held at the Wakefield-Reading track.

Staring from second position, Pierce trailed Mixedwood to the three-quarter mark, where he came up with the gamey little gelding, and after a smashing drive through the home stretch headed him at the wire, in the fastest time of the season, 1:07. Th second heat, although a second slower, was one of the prettiest fights seen on the track this season. Both horses came to the wire nose and nose, and for the entire distance it was a battle royal for supremacy, Ginger B. passing under the wire with less than half a head to the good.

Wildlock, a new comer to the track this year driven by his owner, C. J. Bolton, carried off the honors in the class C event, taking the last two heats after finishing in fourth and third position in the first two heats.

HARD RACES FOR CORNELL.

Ithacan Crew Meets Penn and Yale Rivals on River This Week.

ITHACA, May 13.—Next Wednesday the Cornell varsity crew will leave for Carnegie Lake to meet the Princeton crew for the first time and Yale for the first time since 1898, in a big regatta next Saturday.

The race promises to be an interesting one in view of the fact that these two colleges have been anxious to try Cornell's strength, as the Red and White oarsmen and Coach Charles E. Courtney have beaten decisively for two years all other crews in the East.

Coach Courtney has just announced the selection of his varsity crew for this race as follows: bow, Elliott, 2, Bates, 3, L[illegible], 4, Kruse; 5, Wakeley; 6, Distler; 7, Ferguson, stroke, Bowen, coxswain, Kimball.

Princeton will have the lightest crew on the water and Cornell may have a chance if beef counts for anything. There is only one-half pound difference. Cornell crew average 169 pounds while the Princeton crew averages 168, 172.

Yale is heavier than either with an average of 177 pounds. Yale has also had the advantage of long water practice and plenty of speed trials. Cornellians hope for good weather Thursday and Friday so that good workouts may be had over the course.

Oakleys Beat Vespers.

LOWELL, May 13.—The Oakley Tennis Club in the Mystic Valley tournament at Tyngs Island this afternoon beat Vespers of Lowell in singles and doubles 6 to 1.

PENN EASY WINNER OVER YALE EIGHT

yet the sympathy was almost wholly with Yale, and the easy victory of Pennsylvania cast rather a gloom over the spectators. Had Yale been the victor the display of enthusiasm would have been wholly different.

Endurance cut no figure in the race. The Yale men have been practicing over a four-mile course in anticipation of its race with Harvard, and in this it is believed the weight and endurance of the men will figure. Against Pennsylvania it was different. The crews rowed down stream and the current was of considerable help. Then, too, the course being a two-mile one, did not call for strength so much as speed.

Statements of Coaches.

Both Pennsylvania and Yale were rowing strong at the finish, and every man of both crews was sitting straight.

Coach Ward of Pennsylvania said after the race: "I am proud of the Pennsylvania crew, the boys certainly rowed a great race and had they been pushed harder I believe would still have been there with the necessary speed to win."

Coach Kennedy of Yale said: "The best crew won. It was one of the prettiest two-mile races I have seen. It was speed rather than endurance which counted and Pennsylvania certainly had the speed."

The summary:

Eight Oared Race, two miles straightaway. Won by Pennsylvania by five lengths. Time 10 2-5. Yale second, time 10.04 5.

Pennsylvania Crew—Stroke, T. Reath, No. 7, J. Alexander, No. 6, E. H. Schumaker, No. 5, E. A. Stifel, No. 4, E. L. Deborg, No. 3, R. L. Smith, No. 2, L. W. Hoagland (captain), bow, A. Bennett, coxswain, F. M. Williams.

Yale Crew—Stroke, H. B. Van Sinderen, No. 7, D. Van Blarcom, No. 6, D. C. Oldenburg, No. 5, A. D. Adams, No. 4, J. H. Philbin, No. 3, C. Romeyn; No. 2, J. W. Field, bow, Eliot Frost (captain), coxswain, Phelps Barnum.

Officials—Referee, R. T. Herrick of Boston. Timer and judge for Pennsylvania—Thomas Reath.

Timer and judge for Yale—George St. John Sheffield.

RACE DECIDED AT WIRE.

Interesting Events at Third Matinee Meeting.

The largest crowd of the season turned out to witness the third matinee meeting of the Fellsway Driving Club at Combination park, Medford, yesterday afternoon.

Probably the most interesting event was the last class, when Star King and Reuben L. went around the track in both heats in the closest fashion, and it was not until they passed under the wire that the race was decided. Another fast event was the Class A Trot, when Bell Boy took the measure of the fast gelding Go See in two straight heats. The summary.

RACED SEVEN HEATS.

Dorchester Club Sees a Long, Hard Struggle.

The Dorchester Driving Club held its second series of races at the Franklin Field Speedway, Dorchester, yesterday afternoon, before a large crowd. The race of the afternoon was the Class A pace event, between Cracker Boy, with W. H. Young up, Harry Direct, with D. F. Doyle at the reins, and C. E. R. driven by E. F. Powers. The race went seven heats before a winner could be determined, the horses finishing in the above order, in fast time considering the bad condition of the local track, which is at the present time undergoing repairs.

The Class D event, a six-heat affair, was also a feature, Helgamite, with F. H. Bellows up, winning out over Yellow Boy, driven by A. G. Staples. The summaries:

YACHTS AND POWER BOATS

By HARRY C. THOMAS.

THE New England Engine and Boat Association has received a number of entries for the New England championship races to be sailed all day July 4 off City Point. Indications point toward the coming of several of the fastest power boats in the country for these races. The regatta committee of the association believes that these events will develop some speed breaking records and will certainly afford the motor boat devotees plenty of excitement for the day.

* * *

The executive committee of the Narragansett Bay Yacht Racing Association has arranged for one of the biggest racing seasons in its history and the races will start May 30. The following schedule of open races has been arranged:

Tuesday, May 30, off Fall River, Mass.—Fall River Yacht Club. *Regatta for all classes.

Saturday, June 3, off Edgewood, R. I.—Edgewood Yacht Club. *Ladies' day. Regatta for all classes. Cash prizes. Special race for power boats. Markham trophy.

Saturday, June 10, off East Greenwich, R. I.—East Greenwich Yacht Club. *Regatta for all classes.

Saturday, June 17, off Pawtucket, R. I.—Rhode Island Club. *Ladies' day. Regatta for all classes.

Tuesday, June 20, off Fall River, Mass.—Cotton Carnival. *Regatta for Fall River Yacht Club. Association rules.

Saturday, June 24, off Bristol, R. I.—Bristol Yacht Club. *Regatta for all classes.

Saturday, July 1, off Washington Park, R. I.—Washington Park Yacht Club. *Regatta for all classes.

Tuesday, July 4, off Edgewood, R. I.—Edgewood Yacht Club. First of three races for classes P and Q, limited rating from 21 to 31 feet. Prizes First, second and third. Also first for each race. Value of cups $150 (Stone trophies). *First of three races for class I (Wood trophy). First of three races for classes D and E for Edgewood trophies. First of three races for power boats not to exceed 20 feet over all. Speed boats are barred. Palmer Engine Company's trophy.

Saturday, July 8, off Edgewood, R. I.—Edgewood Yacht Club. Second race for Stone trophy. *Second race for Wood trophy; second race for Edgewood trophies; second race for Palmer trophy. Moonlight race around Prudence Island for all yachts. Overall less one-half of rating, seven seconds per foot per mile. For Henry Ford trophy. Other prizes will be given.

Saturday, July 15, off East Greenwich, R. I.—East Greenwich Yacht Club. *Regatta for all classes.

Saturday, July 22, off Fall River, Mass.—Weetamoe Yacht Club. Races for classes D-E as one class, I, N and power boats.

Saturday, July 29, start off Bristol, R. I.—Bristol Yacht Club. Ocean race.

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, July 31, August 1, 2 and 3, off Conimicut Point—Series of races between representatives of Massachusetts Bay 18-foot Knockabout Association and Narragansett Bay 18-foot Knockabout Association. Races to be handled by Edgewood Yacht Club.

Note—A star (*) denotes that race so marked will count for association championship.)

Pockel & Co., who have taken the Sheldon plant at Neponset, are getting a number of boats ready for commission. Tomorrow the company will lay down the lines for a 30-foot auxiliary ketch for S. N. Bond of New York City. This boat is a duplicate of the Dennett boat built at North Weymouth this Spring and is from the designing board of Arthur P. Homer. The boat will be in commission in about three months. The 18-footer Reina was launched yesterday and will go into commission at Hull the first of the week. Mr. Pockel is to build a new boat storage shed and show rooms and is removing several tenements that were in the yard.

* * *

The Hollis Burgess Yacht Agency reports the sale of the 25-foot sloop Tiger to George Carroll of this city. The boat was owned by Charles Platt, Jr., of Philadelphia, and this season will be raced in Class A of the Interclub Association.

* * *

* * *

Memorial Day will see the racing season open with a rush. An open race will be sailed off City Point by the South Boston Yacht Club and numerous smaller clubs will have racing events on that day.

* * *

B. P. P. Moseley of Newburyport had the trial trip of his speed boat Saturday and it gave a good account of itself. The boat is about 30 feet long and is equipped with a 100-horsepower Sterling engine.

* * *

At Marblehead, Stearns & McKay are busily engaged in getting out several of the racing craft and power boats from the sheds and will put some in commission the coming week.

* * *

C. N. Burnell of the Boston Yacht Club has sold the 35-foot cabin cruiser Eloise to R. M. Strube of Pittsburg, Pa., through the office of A. P. Homer. The name of the boat will be changed to Alsorie, and it will be used on the Canadian Lakes.

* * *

The annual minstrel show of the Quincy Yacht Club will take place at Music Hall, May 18.

* * *

It is being urged among the members of the Cohasset Yacht Club that a new class of boats be established to replace the one-design boats sold recently to the Bridgeport Yacht Club. A class of twenty footers to come within the restrictions of Class R, Interclub Association, has been suggested as a good type of boat.

* * *

Down Buzzards Bay way the V bottom type of boat will be raced considerably. Seven are all ready in the water at Fairhaven and six more are building. These boats are 21 and 23-footers and are equipped with high speed engines.

* * *

An order has been placed by a member of the New York Yacht Club with A. P. Homer for a 30-foot runabout finished in mahogany for use at Bar Harbor. The boat will have two 40-horsepower Sterling engines, and will make 30 miles an hour. The contract has been given to the Bath Marine Construction Company at Bath, Me.

* * *

J. S. Sturtevant of Quincy has decided to lengthen his yacht Gray Duck from 60 feet to 84 feet, and will make other improvements.

* * *

The race for the Norman Cup from New London to Marblehead after the Harvard and Yale boat race will certainly be a hummer and the Eastern Yacht Club is to be congratulated for establishing it. It is bound to bring together as big a fleet of New York and local schooners as have met for some years.

CIVILIANS COMPETE IN RIFLE TOURNEY

Crack Shots Entered in Events Beginning Tomorrow; New Contests Scheduled.

The National Rifle Academy has everything in readiness for its first annual gallery championship tournament, which will be started at the "Federal Range" at No. 117 Federal street to-morrow morning. The tournament will close Saturday evening. There will be thirteen rifle matches, five pistol and revolver matches and three special matches.

This is expected to be the greatest rifle and revolver competition which has ever been pulled off in the East. With all of the crack shots of New England entered, it is not unlikely that several New England rifle and revolver records will be broken. Only residents of New England will be allowed to take part in this tournament.

The greater number of rifle and revolver tournaments which have taken place in New England during the past few years have been open only to members of the State militia and regular army. The promoters have been of the opinion that the boys in blue were the only ones that knew how to handle a rifle or revolver properly, and also that the general public had no desire to see civilians display their skill at the ranges.

Civilians in a Tourney.

But it was here that the promoters made a big mistake. The civilians also desired rifle and revolver competition, and in order to get it they banded themselves together in independent clubs. The National Rifle Academy was among the first to organize.

The directors of the club believe that every normal man should know how to handle a gun. It would not be very difficult to teach them. The desire for a gun seems natural with every healthy-minded boy. At an early age this instruction could begin and become a part of his education. The well-poised body, the keen eye, the well controlled nerves and the necessary temperate habits of the successful marksman are well known, and the encouragement of these traits is the main reason why the National Rifle Academy is holding this great tournament.

In olden days every boy and for that matter girl, was taught to shoot before they were able to hold the long barrel pieces used so well by their fathers or older brothers. They grew up with the rifle, and attained great skill, although the arms of their period were crude when compared with present day developments.

Of late the interest in shooting has fallen off. The National Rifle Academy officials are certain, however, that the tournaments it is planning in every section of the country will go a great ways to arouse enthusiasm.

No one will be neglected in the tournament which starts at the "Federal Range" to-morrow. There are matches for school-boys, club and school teams, military teams, open matches, and even a match for the sturdy "coppers." The full program is:

Backed By Prominent Men.

This program ought to be enough to satisfy the most exacting shooters. It is such a list of matches as has not been held at a New England range for years.

Before the end of June the National Rifle Academy will hold meets in every section of the East. It is then likely that the winners will be matched to meet in a special competition to settle the championship titles.

The tournament is being backed by men prominent both in military and business life. The soldiers believe that no better plan could be adopted to fit men for a possible war.

MOTOR TRUCK RUN IS SCHEDULED FOR NEXT MONTH

Gasoline and Electric Vehicles Used for Commercial Purposes Invited to Participate in Efficiency Demonstration

By L. C. KERRISON.

The three days' efficiency demonstration of commercial motor vehicles, as now planned by the contest committee of the Boston Motor Truck Association, will do much towards popularizing this branch of the industry. While it will have none of the competitive ideas of the run of last October, conducted by the Boston AMERICAN, it will, nevertheless, have a salutary and beneficial effect upon the use of motor vehicles in a commercial manner.

The full value of such a demonstration as the one mapped out cannot be questioned. The great inroads that is being made into the commercial world of Boston by the motor trucks is everywhere apparent, and the merchant has come to that point where he thoroughly admits the value of motor trucks in his business, and is more inclined to adopt the same than at any period in the history of motor trucks.

DEMONSTRATION OF ABSOLUTE EFFICIENCY

In determining to eliminate the competitive features, the contest committee has unquestionably done a very wise thing, as the intent of such runs is mainly to bring to the front the practical side of a motor vehicle and not to require competition, which at the best—in runs even of the character of the Glidden tour, for instance—is often questionable, owing not so much to the rules adopted as to the enforcement and interpretation of those same rules.

It is interesting to note that of the committee appointed by President Whitney to care for this three-day tour, no less than three of them were vitally interested in the contest held by the AMERCAN last October, they having had entries in the same. The chairman of the committee is Mr. A. B. Henley, and the members are A. P. Underhill, L. B. Butler, J. S. Snow and W. H. McKone.

The full details of the run have not yet been determined upon, but it will be open to both gas and electric motor trucks, and there is every reason to believe that both classes will be well filled.

The first day's run will be from Boston to Lowell, Lawrence and return, with controls and stopping points in those two cities. This makes a total running mileage of about sixty-five miles and can really be accomplished by all types of cars in a work-day.

The second day's run will be to Brockton and return and the third will be to South Framingham, Marlboro and Boston.

It is possible, however, that the objective points will be changed, as the desire is to create an interest in sections that should be productive of increased business.

The classification of the trucks will be light truck class, one, two, three, four and five-ton classes, so that trucks of equal carrying capacity will participate in the run in classes with cars of equal tonnage.

Both gasoline and electrical motors will be invited to participate in this run and with the great interest that is at present being taken in the commercial motor trucks in and around Boston, there should surely be a very large entry.

It is estimated that there are something like [illegible] gasoline motor trucks represented in this city and about twenty electric commercial vehicles, and that fully fifty trucks will start on the tour of exemplification and education.

The entrance fee has been set at $25 for the first car and $10 for each additional car entered, and it has been determined that no maker or dealer shall enter more than one car of any one model.

It is impossible that on some one of the three days scheduled for the run, the committee in charge will decide to hold a parade of motor trucks through the business section of Boston, but as yet all the details of the run have not been definitely determined.

The committee will hold another meeting during the present week, when it is believed some interesting data will be made public.

GLIDDEN ITINERARY TO BE ANNOUNCED SHORTLY

Pathfinder's Work Completed; Entries Will Be Sought and Details Announced.

But sixteen more days remain before the closing of entries for the eighth annual tour of the American Automobile Association. While the pathfinders have completed their work of laying out the route between Washington and Ottawa, they are, as yet, not in a position to announce full details.

The press agent of the tour says that the complete itinerary with all controls and night stops, also the place where the hill climbing contest is to be held cannot be made public owing to the fact that certain negotiations with hotels for the accommodation of the tourists are still pending. "Official announcement will be made within a few days."

About one of the few things which the board has really determined upon is that the contest will be held from June 19 to 26, and will be over one of the most picturesque roads imaginable. The board likewise seems to be pretty well posted on what the reciprocity agreement means to automobile manufacturers.

It is obvious, however, that the coming contest, which includes so many towns and cities in the Dominion, will accelerate considerable interest in the motor car in that territory. In the past, in this country wherever the tour has wended its way each season, that territory covered has seen a marked increase in the sale of cars during the next few months and the seasons following. A trail of interest and a craving for cars has been left behind. Now an excellent opportunity is offered American manufacturers to invade a field which will be found in a cordially receptive mood, rather than an antagonistic one, as is the case with some of the foreign markets.

Incidentally the manufacturers who contemplate entering the Glidden Reciprocity tour, will do well to remember that they must have their stock certificates of description filed with the Contest Board of the A. A. A. not later than May 20. No car will be eligible to start in the tour until its registration number has been assigned and its certificate of registration issued by the Contest Board. This rule will be absolute.

A number of makers have written asking if 1912 stock models are eligible. These will not be eligible for entry unless they can comply with the stock car definition of the 1911 contest rules and the minimum of twenty-five cars of such model actually must have been built prior to the start of the tour.

The touring class in which touring cars will compete for the Washington trophy as well as for the Glidden trophy, will be divided into seven divisions of Class A, as follows:

Division 1A	$800 and under.
Division 2A	$801 to $1,200.
Division 3A	$1,201 to $1,600.
Division 4A	$1,601 to $2,000.
Division 5A	$2,001 to $3,000.
Division 6A	$3,001 to $4,000.
Division 7A	$4,001 and over.

Contesting cars in the runabout and miniature tonneau class for the Ottawa trophy, as well as the Glidden trophy, including surreys and single or double rumble seated cars, will be divided into the same seven divisions of Class A as regards price. Touring cars and runabouts will not compete together in the same class. Referring to the price classification the cost of lamps, lighting equipment, speedometers, tops, wind-shields and other similar accessories do not enter into computation of the cars. However, if extra equipment is a germaine part of the car and said equipment or part is liable to penalization for work thereon or for defective condition at the final examination, (technical) its cost price must be included in computing the price classification of the car. Entry fees are as follows: One car $250; two cars by same entry, $400; three cars by same entry $500, and each additional car by same entry $100.

A full complement of passengers must be carried the full route, touring cars carrying four or more persons and miniature tonneaus and runabouts two or more persons.

TO WORK TOGETHER FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS

Two National Organizations Form an Alliance That Should Prove Generally Beneficial.

An important step in the National good roads movement has just been effected as a result of conferences in Washington and New York between representatives of the Touring Club of America and the American Association for Highway Improvement whereby these two organizations have become more closely affiliated for highway improvement. One result of the working agreement will be a division of interests, the American Association for Highway Improvement taking over all of the good roads efforts suggested by its members and through its various branches.

By this affiliation the Touring Club of America proposes to play a more important part in the good roads movement than heretofore as the organization which has been perfected within the past year by the American Association permeates into practically every State of the Union. The association has also gained the hearty cooperation of the big railroads of the country and other large interests, and through these kindred affiliations, more practical results in State aid and actual road improvement have been achieved in the past year than ever before.

The association had its origin a year ago as the result of the widespread interest in the International road congress at Brussels, at which the Touring Club was represented by several delegates. The benefits of such a congress were so clearly revealed that the Touring Club last Fall agitated the necessity of establishing a national organization on virtually the same lines in this country.

Logan Waller Page, director of the U. S. office of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, was quick to see the National significance of such an organization and the American Association for Highway Improvement was formed with Mr. Page as president. Among its officers and directors are: Vice-president, W. C. Brown, president of the New York Central lines, Treasurer Lee McClung, treasurer of the United States, secretary, J. E. Pennybacker, Jr., Washington, D. C., chairman of the Board of Directors, Louis W. Hill, president Great Northern railroad; James McCrea, president Pennsylvania railroad; James S. Harlan, Interstate Commerce Commission; B. F. Yoakum, chairman Frisco lines; A. G. Spalding, San Diego Highway Commission; W. W. Finley, president Southern Railway and Alfred Noble, former president, American Society of Civil Engineers.

The great object of the association in addition to its efforts in stimulating public interest in the necessity for better roads and highway improvement, is the establishment through its numerous local agencies and highway commissioners, of a uniform system of road building throughout the United States somewhat on the general plan as adopted abroad.

FACTORY INCREASE.

Greater Additions Being Made to Rambler Plant.

Two large additions to the plant of the Thomas B. Jeffery Company, manufacturers of Rambler motor cars at Kenosha, will be made immediately. A new addition to the drop forge shop is now in course of erection, while ground was broken this week for a new building, 60x200 feet in dimensions, to be devoted to the finished car department. Just 22,760 square feet of additional floor space will be added.

Ninety-four per cent of all Rambler parts are now made in the Kenosha plant. The addition to the drop forge shop is to provide for the making of new forgings for the 1912 output.

Rambler sales for 1911 have slightly exceeded those for 1910, in spite of the fact that every month in 1910 showed an increase of about 40 per cent. over the same period of the year previous.

BOSTON NOT INCLUDED IN GRAND CIRCUIT AUTO RACES

Lowell Is Awarded a Date in September for the Holding of Her Annual Road Races.

Worcester and Lowell figure in the dates as announced for the Grand Circuit races which will be inaugurated with the 500-mile sweepstakes at Indianapolis on Memorial Day.

Boston is not included. Neither is this city included in the list [illegible] announced for the season of 1911.

There are [illegible] events scheduled on the Grand Circuit, and while it opens with the 500-mile track race at Indianapolis and closes with the light car race at Savannah on November 3, it makes no provision whatever for the Vanderbilt or the Grand Prize events. That, however, is very readily understood when it is remembered that these two races have been for two or three years under the jurisdiction of the Automobile Club of America.

As they are international contests in fact as well as name, they come within the jurisdiction of the A. C. A., which is affiliated with the International Automobile Association.

There is every reason to believe that the Grand Prize race will be held in conjunction with the light car race at Savannah in November next. The Motor Hodings Company, to whose care has been entrusted both the Vanderbilt and the Grand Prize, will, it is understood, find keen rivalry in holding the same on the Long Island course. Still that is another matter. Neither that organization nor the A. C. A. has anything whatever to do with the National Circuit dates.

The circuit date in Worcester is for hill climb on July 11, and the one in Lowell is for a road race on September [illegible].

In making its official announcement regarding the National Circuit [illegible] contest board [illegible]:

"Owing to unforeseen circumstances in connection with arrangements for race equipment and special train [illegible] the proposed national circuit, it [illegible] necessary to carry out the [illegible] idea in a somewhat modified form. NEW THOMAS MANAGER.

H. N. Halliday Takes Charge of the Boston Branch.

Mr. M. H. Halladay has been appointed general manager of the Thomas Boston Company, and brings with him as his assistant Mr. Edward Wells, who heretofore has served in a responsible position as assistant sales manager at the Thomas factory.

In these gentlemen's hands has been entrusted the Boston interests of the Thomas plant, and while it gives to both these gentlemen well earned promotion, it brings to Boston two recognized experts in the motor line.

They were introduced to the members of the Boston establishment and to the Boston trade by former Manager Charles S. Henshaw and General Sales Manager George Fitzsimmons yesterday. Mr. Henshaw and Mr. Fitzsimmons will remain in Boston for a day or so in order to assist Messrs. Halladay and Wells, so far as possible, in becoming familiar with the local conditions.

Mr. Fitzsimmons said that the Thomas people consider Boston as one of their strongest branches, and feels confident that in the hands of Mr. Halladay the interests of the Thomas Company and likewise Thomas owners in this section will be well cared for.

Changes in the Trade.

The Premier Motor Car Company and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company are both to make a change of headquarters in the very near future, having negotiated for the construction of suitable buildings on Beacon street, between the present Peerless and Autocar buildings.

The Gray & Davis Company will in the very near future take possession of their new quarters in the Taxi Service Building in the Back Bay, while the Oakland people have secured and taken possession of a service building in the Shoe and Leather Building on Ames street, Cambridge.

Other changes of headquarters in the local trade will be announced in the very near future.

DECATUR SUCCESSFUL.

Taylor Company Gets Many Orders for Decatur Trucks.

Within a week five Decatur trucks have arrived at the Taylor Motor Sales Company and it is expected that these will follow the others that have been received here and be picked up by merchants. "There is no question about the future of the truck business," said President John [illegible] Taylor yesterday.

"There are two things that must be taken into consideration, however, to make the selling of the trucks a success. First, one must have a reliable vehicle that will do more than the makers expect because the owners have no hesitation in overloading them.

"Then the agency must be in a position to deliver their trucks quickly when ordered. Business men are brought up in an environment where they know the value of time, and in planning for a change from horses to motor vehicles they figure just when it is most advantageous to do it without loss. A difference of a week in delivering a truck may mean a great deal to a firm. As the Decatur truck is reliable, proven so repeatedly, and the factory is turning them out rapidly and shipping them here we are receiving orders from many places.

"Recently our agency placed trucks with Henry Siegel, Thomas F. Galvin, Taft & Mitchell of Newton, W. A. Cutler, Lawrence; John McIntosh, Portsmouth; Fred D. Johnson, Concord, N. H.; John Imbershied and Kossess & Kannell. They are engaged in many different lines, which show the ability of the Decatur truck for many purposes."

RACE DRIVERS' ASSO.

Takes Measures to Protect Those Who Think They Can Drive.

At two meetings of the Motor Racing Drivers' Association of America, held within a week, much action was taken in getting the organization on a fine working basis. Counsel has been retained and the by-laws drawn up. Last Saturday these by-laws were approved and at a meeting held Tuesday, May 3, the directors took up other important matters. The Indianapolis meeting, at which a full roster of officers will be elected, is scheduled for May 28.

It was decided to have three classes of membership—active, honorary and novice. Active members will pay the full initiation fee, while the novice class (which is to include men who have never driven in races, yet has speed contest aspirations), will pay half the initiation fee and will be taken into the national organization when they have demonstrated their ability as drivers in races. This decision was arrived at after much discussion, as the association has no desire to keep new competent men out of the game and yet wishes to make the standard high. The association will endeavor to arrange for novices to qualify in special novice or minor events before becoming full-fledged members.

In New Hands.

The business of the Angier Company has recently been purchased by the Green & Sweet Company, which will hereafter conduct a high class automobile accessory business at 737 Boylston street.

Mr. Russell Green has for a good many years been at the head of the Massachusetts avenue branch of the Bi-Motor Company, and Mr. Sweet is by no means a stranger to that branch of the industry.

These two gentlemen under the firm name of Green & Sweet Company, will make it a special point to care for the individual user.

ENORMITY OF FORD PLANT.

Factory Where Model T Is Made Is Most Efficient.

Not even Detroit people appreciate the immensity of the Ford Automobile plant where is made every fifth car sold in America. The main building of the plant is one-sixth of a mile in length, four stories high, and contributes a large part to the total area of floor space which, to be exact, is thirty acres.

The Ford plant is the very embodiment of scientific efficiency. Over 5,000 cars are made there every month during the height of the season—the months of April, May and June. The machinery and buildings represent an investment of $22,000,000, every dollar of which came from the earnings of the business.

The entire plant is furnished power from one of the largest gas engines ever made—a brute of an engine of 1,500 horsepower. It generates the power for the entire factory, foundries, heat-treating departments and tool rooms.

650,000 No-Rim-Cut Tires

And Each Displaced a Clincher

That's the record to date. And every day we add to this output 2,200 tires.

The demand has grown to an avalanche. [illegible] mammoth plants, with three [illegible] of men, are run 24 hours per day.

The Goodyear No-Rim-Cut, with amazing quickness, has become the leading tire in America.

All because these patented tires for tens of thousands—have cut tire bills in two.

Which Tire?

The ordinary tire—the clincher tire—rim-cuts if run flat. A punctured tire may be wrecked in a single block.

The Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tire has been run flat in a hundred tests, as far as 20 miles. Of all the 650,000 sold, not one has ever rim-cut.

These tires are now sold at the same price as standard clincher tires. They fit the same rims.

Which tire will you take?

10% Oversize

No-Rim-Cut tires—because they are hookless—can be made 10 per cent oversize without any misfit on the rim. And we do it.

That means 10 per cent more air—10 per cent added carrying capacity—without any extra cost. And that, with the average car, adds 25 per cent to the tire mileage.

That oversize takes care of the extras—the top, glass front, etc. It avoids the blow-outs due to overloading. Without it, nine tires in ten are given too much load.

These two features together—No-Rim-Cut and oversize—under average conditions, cut tire bills in two. Yet these patented tires now cost no more than tires that rim-cut, tires just rated size.

Which is your choice?

The demand for No-Rim-Cuts is larger than ever before came to any one tire. It has multiplied six times over in the past two years. It is growing faster than ever before. Ask for our Tire Book and know the reasons. Get rid of the worry, the bother, the cost of the old style clincher tire.

AUTOMOBILES

WILL NOT AVERAGE BETTER THAN 75 MILES AN HOUR

Forty-six of the Most Famous Drivers Will Combat for Honor and Riches in the Indianapolis Sweepstakes.

Forty-six of the most famous speed cars on the [illegible] six of foreign and forty of American construction are entered for the 500-mile sweepstake at Indianapolis on Memorial Day next.

The speed that will be attained by these cars in the long-drawn-out contest is at this time problematic. It is, however, believed that the winning car will average something like 80 miles an hour, and this belief is based somewhat on the fact that in order to be eligible for competition the cars must show in actual practice, on the track itself, the Saturday previous to the race, an ability to do a speed of [illegible] miles per hour.

Those who have seen some of the cars already in training, and who have watched their records in the past, are confident that all will qualify for the honor and prestige of participating in what will, unquestionably, prove the blue ribbon event of the American motor racing world.

These cars will be manned by men whose daring and whose ability as drivers is beyond question, by men who have in the past proven their ability to produce record-breaking work, who have scarcely [illegible] the records, and some of them have given to the world new marks at different distances.

That the race is to be attractive and hard fought is amply proven by the fact that the most famous of famous drivers will compete for honors. Bobby Burman, who to-day more than any other one man occupies a position of distinction, and [illegible] as said the shoes of Oldfield, will, unlike Oldfield, enter into actual racing competition with the others. He will not retire to the milder form of motor driving and record exhibition work, but will go out into the open and strive for honor and glory in the same contest with other men.

Burman has been entered for the big contest, and he is particularly anxious to win the same. He is no more anxious than are forty-five other drivers, including men who have established records in long distance events, as, for instance, Strang, Grant, De Palma, Aitken, Chevrolet, Wilcox, Bruce-Brown, Dawson, Harroun, Mulford, Tetzlaff, Bragg and Disbrow.

These men are known the length and breadth of the country. They have proven their ability to send motor vehicles at a speed-annihilating pace, and in this coming contest they can be depended upon to do fully as good if not better than in the past.

To the winner of this contest will go [illegible] $[illegible],000 in good [illegible] a small fortune as it were. Other than that, the [illegible] will give its holder a prestige that [illegible] be [illegible]. Small wonder is it then that the men are already commencing to gather in Indianapolis. Veterans of many hard campaigns in the sport of speed-dom racing are gathering at the track.

Included among them are men whose names have been linked with the narrowest of narrow escapes from death many times and whose daring has caused thousands to gaze with bated breath.

Despite their former trying escapades they are looking forward to the long grind with as much keen interest as are the younger generation of pilots. To them the showing made by the several cars on the Saturday previous to the big race will be as interesting as the race itself, as it will give them an idea of just what can be expected from the several machines.

This trial spin will, it is believed, be productive of records, and the doings that day will furnish food for consideration for everyone interested in motor racing.

It has been variously estimated that the average speed in the 500-mile contest will be over eighty miles an hour, but to a man on the outside it really does not look as though the average will be even, if it as fast as that, over seventy-five miles an hour.

Five hundred miles is a long distance for a race, and especially when the cars are being sent at the top of speed. It will be a tire-wearing expedition in every sense of the word, and the replacing of tires, the refilling of oil tanks, and the various adjustments that might be participated in a run of this distance will cut deeply into the average speed.

SOCIETY DONATES USE OF ITS CARS

Generous and Spontaneous Reply to Request for Cars for Use of Blind, Crippled Children.

Nearly one hundred cars have already been donated for the use of the blind, crippled and orphan children of Boston on their annual motor ride to and outing at Sharon on Monday, June [illegible]. Yet this number is hardly one-fifth of the total number that will be necessary to care for the 2,000 blind children, which it is figured, will be cared for through the efforts of Secretary Chester I. Campbell of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association and the Rev. Mr. Deming.

The undertaking is greater this year than ever, and far beyond what is now the puny efforts of a few years ago. Not only are cars necessary, but the expense of providing lunches for this large army of children is by no means small. Of course, the first requisite is motor cars. If you have a motor car, lend it to the orphans for one day in the year. If you have no car, or yours is in commission on that particular day, then the committee will be grateful to receive a slight monetary donation, as that will help out immensely and furnish to the children some of the pleasures which are foreign to them, although an every-day occurrence to the more fortunate.

The money secured by these donations will be devoted to the renting of additional cars and also the purchasing of a few extras for the children.

Tom Burke, the well known runner, has volunteered his services again, and will arrange a series of competition for the chauffeurs as well as the children.

The games between the chauffeurs last year were as much appreciated by the children as they were by the drivers of the motor cars.

As exhibiting the interest, which the local automobile dealers take in the outing it is interesting to note that Manager Chase Langmaid, of the Autocar Company, and Manager Aultman, of the Frayer-Miller, have both offered the use of large sight-seeing trucks, which will care for something like thirty children each.

NOW OCCUPIES ITS NEW QUARTERS

Diamond Rubber Co. Establishes Headquarters in Heart of Boston's Motor Rialto.

That motoring of itself has attained a place of permanence in commercial and social activity is attested by the constant and consistent growth of its varied allied and associated industries. The manufacture of automobile accessories is as ramified in its scope as the product is replete in its nature and has assumed an importance [illegible] only by the combined output of motor vehicles. Truly significant of this [illegible] development of a subsidiary enterprise is the erection on Boylston street of an entire six story establishment, especially designed and equipped for the sole distribution of pneumatic and solid automobile tires. The occupancy of this building by the Diamond Rubber Company tomorrow is an event of surpassing interest in that it affords to the motoring public facilities heretofore unparalleled and unapproached. Every known contrivance for the prompt execution of business or that tends itself to the comfort of its patrons has been by the Diamond Company incorporated in their New England headquarters, now available for public inspection.

Adapted from a study of the style of architecture prevalent in France during the reign of Henry the Fourth, the design in perspective is indeed singularly impressive. While concrete reinforced with steel gives substance to the structure, its aspect aesthetically is in pleasing contrast with the environs by the almost inconceivable yet ornate effects which art and skill have produced in pressed brick and carved limestone. Viewed from an approach, there obtains a sense of monumental splendor but rarely found in architecture of a distinctly commercial purport. And be it said the architects, Andrews, Jacques & Rantoul, have, in their departure from the prosaic, successfully wrought a structure embodying every essential to industrial efficiency, yet with it contributing to the pleasure of the eye and to the convenience of the person.

The entrance admits to a spacious foyer treated in brown oak, enriched on either side by arched tinted recesses and quartered panels. Facing the entrance has been placed the counter where preside attendants or counter-salesmen who deliver tires in fulfillment of orders, receive them for inspection and adjustment and perform such added duties pertaining to the department of sales as may be required of them. The counter is in direct communication with all other departments to which in the course of business it necessarily relates, and commands immediate intercourse by means of telephone, pneumatic tube, and electric elevator service. To the right of the counter is the manager's reception office, beautifully done in panels. Here centres the inter-communicating telephone and signal systems whereby the mere push of an electric button the executive is enabled to transmit directions to any desired part of his organization. To the left of the main entrance is found the passenger lift, electrically controlled and of most modern design; whereas to the rear have been installed all conveniences of approved pattern for patrons. Immediately opening from the counter space, yet concealed from view by massive double doors, is the stock room of the solid tire or commercial truck department, the mechanical or applying division of which has been assigned commodious quarters in the basement. Here also have been situated the shipping, receiving, porter, boiler and storage rooms.

The second floor is so constructed as to form a mezzanine gallery for the first and it is here that the main office staff is quartered. Directly to the rear and opening off a passage there are arranged elaborate retiring rooms and a stationary storage room. Nor can it be imputed that the company has been unmindful or inconsiderate of the interests of its employes, for there has been set apart exclusively for their use a large, well appointed apartment for recreation and so furnished as to harmonize with the object which it is designed to subserve. This room is likewise admirably adapted for the meetings of the Diamond Boston Club, an organization recently instituted by the management on behalf of its employes for the conserving and co-ordinating of a mutual end. A small area in this room has been delegated to an unobtrusive booth where is located the telephone switchboard which forms the termini of no less than eight trunk lines that distribute them-selves into twenty-four stations, all under the direct control of but a single operator. Connected with this recreation room by a small passage is another of identical size designed as a conference room and appropriately appointed for the purpose which its name would imply.

The third floor front is allotted to the adjustment and correspondence departments and is designed to meet the special conditions which essentially characterize them. Provision has been made that each adjuster has access to a private office to which he and the customer may retire and consummate the matter in hand. Of these offices there are four, which lead directly from a large room intended for the clerical assistants. To the right of this space and leading from the passage as one leaves the passenger lift is a reception hall supplied with inviting divans, where one may be at their ease pending their engaging the attention of an adjustor or others as may be desired to confer with. From this leads the correspondent's office, which is notable for its light and spaciousness. The entire rear of this floor, excepting space for toilets, is devoted to the inspection and testing of tires upon which an adjustment is sought. As the casing is received at the counter it is duly recorded, a receipt tendered and it is then sent to the inspection room by means of an electric service elevator automatically controlled, which transmits it to the inspectors. It is then subjected to examination as to the nature of injuries sustained or defects inherent, of which a report is transcribed and carried by pneumatic tube to the adjustment department. In the interim the customer or chauffeur as the case may be, is directed to the adjustment office, where the report descriptive of the condition of his casing is received simultaneously with his arrival. Thus is seen with what celerity the negotiation of adjustments may be proceeded with and concluded.

The building is thoroughly fireproof in every respect, has an interior fire escape, complying with the building requirements, is 45x87 feet in dimensions and the floor area equals 46,000 square feet. Building operations were begun on August [illegible], and completed on the 12th of May. It is therefore worthy of note to compare the tremendous strides gained by the Diamond Company in seven years from the time when the New England branch was first inaugurated at No. 174 Columbus avenue, with an approximate floor area of [illegible]. It has in that period accomplished [illegible] to a constant expansion only [illegible] completion of its own building [illegible] presented is the success which [illegible] under the administration of [illegible] P. Weber, the present manager, [illegible] last year increased the volume of business previously done by 180 per cent. [illegible] ever since maintained a corresponding increase. Similarly the organization [illegible] upon his advent, consisted of [illegible] members, has by the existing business requirements necessarily augmented to eighty. And it is [illegible] with the facts to affirm that the model building of the Diamond Rubber Company, in Boston, is a standing monument to the enterprise and unceasing [illegible] who is charged with the direction of his company's interests through New England.

FIRST ENTRY FOR THE GLIDDEN TOUR

According to recent advices from eastern sources, preliminary arrangements for this year's Glidden tour are rapidly rounding into shape. A. M. Robbins, manager of the Chicago Abbott Detroit organization, has the distinction of entering the first contestant for the big event. The machine entered is a "30" Abbott-Detroit built in exact duplication of the Abbott "Bull Dog," which has already covered a fourth of its notable 100,000 mile tour.

Robbins will drive the Abbott Detroit car in the Glidden tour himself. Some years ago, in another make of car, in the lead of Winter, Robbins lowered the record between Boston and New York. Since then Robbins has been at the wheel in several strenuous tours, and there is no doubt that the interests of his company in the Glidden will be well conserved when he starts as the Abbott pilot on June 19.

In a letter to S. G. Chapman, B. C. Spitzley, assistant general manager of the Abbott Motor Car Company, says: "In addition to the car which will be driven by Robbins, the factory will start two more Abbott-Detroits. We consider this year's Glidden the most sensible tour inaugurated since the birth of the contest. It will demonstrate the endurance and everyday use of an automobile. The roads will be average, and the hill climbs will be of sufficient frequency to give the participants any test demanded by prospective buyers. In former Glidden tours the predominating ideas seemed to be to provide opportunity for the destruction of cars by subjecting them to the most extraordinary and unlooked for road conditions. It would have been just as easy to take the car out in the back yard and use an axe on it for all that the event proved in a great many instances."

IN ITS NEW QUARTERS.

The Kelley Truck in a Home of Its Own in Cambridge.

Manager Aultman of the Eastern Motor Truck, handlers of the Kelley truck, formerly known as the Frayer-Miller, says that Boston offers exceptional opportunities for the development of the commercial vehicle business.

Although having been in Boston but a few days, he has seen sufficient to demonstrate to him the real value of a local representative of any truck manufacturing concern.

The Kelley is well known in Boston, having been in the hands of private owners for several years. Mr. Aultman points with pride to the work of a three-and-one-half-ton truck delivered to Warner & Co., furniture movers, a year ago to-day. Since it has been in commission this truck has covered 35,000 miles, having visited every State in New England, going as far north as South Bristol, Me., and as far west as South Norwalk, Ct. It is doing the work which the Warner Company admits could not possibly be done by horse drawn vehicle, and is in a sense competing with considerable success with the railroads of this section.

SOLID TIRE MILEAGE.

Tires Cover Over 5000 Miles and Are in Fine Condition.

The question of solid tire mileage is one of direct importance to every commercial vehicle owner, and for this reason a report submitted to the United States Tire Company by the Philadelphia Electric Company is both interesting and instructive. The Philadelphia concern maintains an extensive motor truck service and uses Hartford tires equipment. A careful record kept up to April 1 of the present year showed over twenty tires that had run more than 5,000 miles and yet are in such condition that they seem good for many more miles of service. One tire, which on April 1 was apparently as good as new, covered 8,922 miles, another 8,817 miles and two others passed the 8,000-mile mark. Six and seven thousand miles was not an uncommon record.

Auto Supply Stock Going Fast.

The bankrupt sale of auto supplies, which the Standard Tire & Rubber Company has been conducting for the past two weeks, enters on its third week with a much reduced stock. There are still left, however, many choice bargains in automobile accessories that owners of cars can not fail to appreciate. This entire stock was purchased by the Standard Tire & Rubber Company from the United States Bankruptcy Court, and was included in the assets of the Percy Ford Co. in bankruptcy. The goods are being sold at Nos. 222, 224, 226, 228 Columbus avenue, and as the building has been leased the sale must be brought to a close the coming week. The fixtures are also included in the sale. All odd lots will be closed out at sacrifice prices.

GILSON RECEIVES MERITED PROMOTION

Captain William Mitchell Lewis, president of the Mitchell-Lewis Motor Company of Racine, Wis., has just announced that at the last meeting of the directors of that company James W. Gilson was elected to be an officer and director of the organization and advanced from the position of sales manager which he has held for several years, to that of assistant secretary of the big $10,000,000 corporation.

Because of the promotion of Henry Plow, late assistant treasurer of the corporation, and his promotion as manager of the London branch, the following changes, in addition to Mr. Gilson's promotion, were necessitated:

H. E. Rodman has been advanced from assistant secretary to assistant treasurer. William H. Armstrong has been made office manager; W. L. Day has been made general sales manager and will assume his duties on June 1, while Charles A. Armstrong has been appointed assistant general sales manager.

A NEW COMPANY.

The Gramm and Aries Trucks in New Hands.

The latest addition to the local motor world is the Gramm Motor Truck Company of New England, incorporated with a capital of $25,000, for the purpose of handling the product of the Gramm Motor Company.

At the head of this new company is Mr. C. I. Fischer, who for several years back has been manager of the Boston branch of the Reliance Company. Mr. Fischer has just returned from a trip through the West and starts business in his new line immediately.

This company has secured a salesroom in the Hathaway Building, corner of Summer street and Atlantic avenue, and a commercial maintenance garage for the Gramm trucks at 161-163 A street, South Boston, which is within five minutes of the South Station.

Mr. Louis Lawrence, formerly master mechanic with the Reliance, will fill the same position with the new organization and will see to it that all present and prospective owners of Gramm trucks will receive careful consideration.

One thing which the new company is about to do that will appeal to Gramm owners is the thorough inspection of each and every Gramm truck now in service.

Gramm trucks are built in five sizes, 1,500 pounds to 10,000 pounds. All have four-cylinder, four-cycle motors, with special clutches and transmission.

In addition, the company will handle, as exclusive representatives for New England, the Aries, a French product of seven-ton capacity and equipped with solid steel tires. This truck it will be remembered, has been adopted by the French government.

Mr. Fischer anticipates having a full line of his cars in the commercial run of next month.

Fuller Buys a Horse.

Alvan T. Fuller's love of horseflesh cannot be questioned. Although one of the leading motor enthusiasts and tradesmen to be found in this country and noted as a keen and exceptionally good driver, Mr. Fuller occasionally yearns for equestrian pleasures.

During the past week he purchased a choice Kentucky saddler, but saved his reputation in the fact that what he purchased was a Packard, or, in other words, sold by Mr. Packard, which keeps the horse in his own "billy whack," as it were.

BURMAN IN NIGHT DRIVE.

Famous Record-Breaker Will Go for Night Records.

Not satisfied with his recent shattering of world's records at Daytona, "Bob" Burman, the speed monarch, is about to attempt a performance which promises to be as spectacular a drive as has ever been seen in motor history. On Wednesday night, May 17, Burman, in the "Blitzen" Benz, will drive the powerful world's record holding car in a speed trial on the Long Island motor parkway, which the daring driver believes will be the fastest ever accomplished by any man and car at night.

For illumination Burman will use the new Remy magnetic light, which he saw demonstrated for the first time this week and with which he was highly impressed. The speed trial will mean a strenuous test for this invention, for while the big car will not be able to go anything like as fast on the narrow cement parkway as it did at the broad Daytona Beach, it nevertheless will "go some" and a new record is more than likely.

It must be borne in mind that the parkway at night is not lighted by anything save the moon, which is not always an excellent guide for a speeder. Burman will have to depend on the Remy magnetic light to make "lightening time" possible.

HUPMOBILE IN COLON.

Panama Railroad Official Uses It to Traverse Rough Territory.

Colon, Panama, boasts of one lone automobile. It is a four-passenger Hupmobile touring car, owned by Lieutenant Meens of the United States army, who is on detached duty in that country as assistant to the superintendent of the Panama Railroad.

In the course of his supervising duties the lieutenant has to cover considerable territory, most of it over roads that are well nigh impassable. On account of the climate the use of a horse is out of the question and the going is dangerous even for a sure-footed mule. The lieutenant figured that he could save a lot of time and energy if he could find an automobile that was practicable for his purposes and decided on experimenting with a Hupmobile on account of its light weight and well known sturdiness. The experiment has proven highly successful and the car is pointed out as one of the sights of the place.

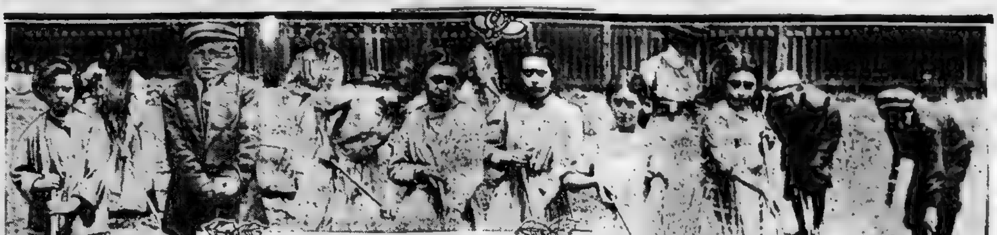
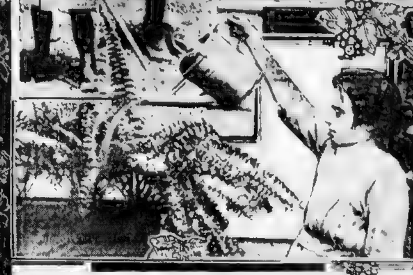
MRS. JACK GARDNER'S PRIZE OFFER STIRS CHILDREN



MRS JOHN L. GARDNER. © BY AMERICAN JOURNAL-EXAMINER.



In the South End Industrial School, where Summer gardening is carried on, two large patches of ground adjoining the school building are used. Last year one little girl gathered from a plot 12x18 feet five ears of corn, eighteen bunches of radishes, eleven Summer squash, fifteen quarts of stringed beans, twelve bunches of beets, one bushel of swiss chard, forty-two tomatoes, five quarts of peas, twelve heads of lettuce, three cucumbers, one quart of parsley, six turnips and three cabbages. Over one hundred and fifty children will be interested in the South End work this year under the charge of Miss Julia H. Bradley.

Scores of Pupils in North, South and West End Schools Working Hard in Gardens to Win Awards Offered by Lady of Fenway Palace.

THEY love Mrs. Jack Gardner, do the little people of the North End and West End, and they are all going to compete again for the prizes the good city offers for yard and roof gardens and window boxes, but they say—the Rachel Finkelsteins and the Morris Goodmans and the Mary Vianitellis and the Tony Baldinis that they would just love to be assured that the prizes will be awarded in the Gardner Museum in Fenway Court. Because that is what happened last year.

The little farmers of the North and West Ends are ready for Spring planting. The officers of the Social Union have made the customary announcement of prizes—saying nothing, of course, to suggest the identity of the donor and all who desire to compete have been advised that before June 1 they must send word to the secretary [illegible] secretary is Mr. Philip Davis of the Civic Service House at No. 112 Salem street.

Gardens Already Under Way.

And this is why the hurdy-gurdy man fails to draw in Prince street any more, and why there is no rush in Salem street of a May evening when the woman comes around with the trained canary over whose cake hangs the sign:

Ladies and Gentlemen!
For five cents this birdie tells your Past and Future Life!

"The bird I want to hear from," Rachel Finkelstein said to Mary Vianitelli last night, as they sat together in a Salem street doorway, "is the bird that can tell me will I do so. It by my petunias this year as I done by my mother's geraniums last year."

All over the two big wards, big in population, small in area, the observant visitor will note the preparation of the little gardeners. There may be stores and stables and saloons underneath and all around, but if one looks up he will find the boxes ready in their places at the windows. On many roofs the gardens are under way. It may be a long walk to green fields and pleasant flowers, but the North and the West Ends—more especially the North End—are prepared to make the most of opportunity.

Cash Prizes of $100.

The prize money amounts to $100, to be awarded for "best results in yard and roof gardens and window boxes or other means of beautifying the home with plants, vines and flowers." The North End and the West End will each have prizes of ten, eight, four, three and two dollars, making eighteen prizes in all.

More little people in the North End than you would imagine know that common unglazed clay pots are the best for their purposes, and that, for the house, a round piece of oil cloth, banded with tape, makes an ideal pot mat. For plants that must have a lot of sunshine, the Rachels and Morrises and the Marys and the Tonys understand that a window facing the south is the best of all.

Young people who have competed before experienced gardeners [illegible] or 14 years old understand that the plain board shelf for the window should be at least six inches below the window sill, in order to hide the pots from view and give the sun an opportunity.

The awards will be made in the second week of August. Entrants have been advised that seeds, loam and window boxes may be procured at No. 87 Poplar street, West End Elizabeth Peabody House or at Social Service House, No. 37 North Bennet street, North End.

Develop Love of Flowers.

From time to time the homes will be visited by Miss Jean Cross, the garden work director of Boston Social Union, or Mr. William W. Locke of Civic Service House. Miss Cross and Mr. Locke will also give demonstration lessons.

"Due consideration will be given," says the announcement, "to the difficulties and obstacles to be overcome by the applicant, as well as to the artistic beauty, good taste and the extent of the display. In other words, intelligent and earnest work against disadvantages will count largely in making the award. Children and grown-up folks of all age and nationalities, are invited to take part."

Mr. Locke of the Civic Service House said yesterday that geraniums, [illegible] appear to be the favorites of early entrants but one little lady in waiting had a lot to say about "petunias," while another entertained the group [illegible] with an account of the discovery of the fuchsia.

[illegible] Mr. Locke said, quoting from somebody or other who has written a book about it, "As a useful means for developing a taste for plant [illegible] love for flowers, I count nothing so effective as this simple style of gardening for who has not noticed that where flowers reign, grace of mind and manner soon follow."

All Anxious to See Palace.

So Flora is about to begin her annual reign in the North and West Ends, where they know all about Flora and are her loyal subjects.

"But what I want to know," says Rachel Finkelstein, "is shall the prize winners see Mrs. Gardner again and visit the palace in Fenway Court? Believe me, Mary, that was better than all the prizes."

LITTLE MAN WITH THE HOE IS BUSY

So Is the Little Boston Woman, Too, All Working Settlement House Gardens.

SCHOOL FARMS FLOURISH

Children Answer the Problem of "Eighty Feet and Happiness" in Congested City.

THE chap who wrote about "One Acre and Liberty" ought to come to Boston and write the sequel.

The children under the care of South End and Lincoln settlement houses have a "farm" back of the Rice School, at Dartmouth and Appleton streets.

In the Roxbury district a piece of ground belonging to the Boston Elevated Railway Company has been turned over to the settlement workers of the Roxbury Neighborhood House, the Ruggles Street Neighborhood House and the Robert Gould Shaw House. The plot is situated at Washington and Sterling streets. Here there is room for sixty children.

Work in the West End.

In the West End the preparation of a lot for the children is going on under the auspices of Elizabeth Peabody House. Across the river the Cambridge Neighborhood House has a plot adjacent to its building.

And all of this in addition to the 1,300 window boxes to be placed immediately by Boston Social Union in the more congested sections of the city. These, as well as the school gardens, will be visited from time to time by an experienced gardener and his helpers.

Every youngster will be taught to spade his own patch of ground and care for it. His? Yes, and hers, for the little suffragettes have come into their own. There are hopes for little women as well as for little men.

Back of the Rice School at Dartmouth [illegible] patches measure 8 by 10 feet. There is room for forty boys and girls. The young woman in charge is Miss Jean A. Cross of Boston Social Union, whose success along similar lines in Yonkers, N. Y., is well known.

Miss Cross wasn't altogether certain yesterday that her little agriculturists may not sow some wheat. "In order," she said, "that the children may see for themselves just where their bread comes from." In any event there will be beans and beets, carrots, lettuce and radishes. The seeds are sold at one cent a package.

In addition to this "market gardening," there will also be a course in "landscape gardening," the dwarf flowers being represented by calendula, French marigold, nasturtium, sweet alyssum and petunia. Among the tall flowers will be asters, bachelor buttons, sunflowers and zinnia. There will also be vines, climbing nasturtium, morning glory and runner-beans.

Boston's youthful farmers will be taught how deep to sow the seed. Weeding will be explained. Transplanting will be demonstrated. Every detail in the raising of vegetables will be gone over. It is not at all impossible, Miss Cross believes, that in the Fall the youngsters will have vegetables to take home and store for the Winter. They are naturally enthusiastic.

The 1,300 window boxes to be placed by the Boston Social Union are ready with loam, nourishment and sand. They have been built to order. Similar boxes gave so much pleasure and created so much interest in the congested districts last year that many pennies were diverted from the candy counter to the seedsman. The money received at the Social Union from the sale of seeds goes back into the work.

Great Good for Children.

"These gardens," says Miss Mary Babb, superintendent of the work for the Boston Social Union, "do an incalculable amount of good. They teach the children about nature. They come to know the different kinds of vegetables, and the names of flowers, so that when they see one growing elsewhere they know what to call it. By this means the child becomes familiar with the products of nature.

"Besides this there is always the educational and moral value in these gardens and window boxes. The children see that flowers and vegetables will grow with care. They must be taken care of. This truth is so impressed upon them that it has a moral value.

"In many ways do we see the effect of these gardens in teaching children to be tidy and to keep clean the back yards. You would be surprised to see how children learn tidiness by taking care of flowers. They love to see the flowers.

"They will tell you all about them. They know that the weeds must be plucked out if they want success, and they see this same principle afterwards in other things. I do not know of any work that seems to be enjoyed by boys and girls so much as this work of the school garden and the window garden. The parents become interested in the work of their children, and for the first time many fathers and mothers have become acquainted with flowers, plants and vegetables."

DENTISTS' MEET ENDS.

Lectures by Oral Surgeons From All Over Country.

The three days' convention of the Massachusetts Dental Society came to an end last night with a banquet at the Hotel Lenox.—A series of clinics was given at the Harvard Dental School on Longwood avenue.

WOOD'S FUNERAL TO-DAY.

G. A. R. Men to Attend Services for Natick Postmaster.

The funeral of Charles J. Wood, postmaster of Natick, who hanged himself Thursday morning, will be at his home on High street at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The members of General Wardsworth Post No. 63, G. A. R., of which he was commander, will attend in a body. Clerks of the Natick postoffice will be pallbearers. Burial will be in Dell Park cemetery.

Mission in Medford Church.

St. Joseph's Church, Medford, was filled to overflowing during the week. It was the women's week of the mission which is being conducted by the Rev. Fr. Higgins of the Order of St. Dominic. Several hundred children attended the afternoon devotions. At 7:45 this evening the men's mission will be opened for one week. Masses will be at 5 and 8.

LABOR NOTES FROM UNIONS OF BOSTON

Big Convention of Railroad Machinists Begins Here To-morrow Morning.

Three hundred and nineteen railroad systems will be represented at the annual conference of the Northeastern Consolidated District Council of Railroad Machinists, which will take up the question of wages and working conditions for the men employed on those roads at the Quincy House to-morrow morning. Timothy A. Connors of Charlestown, president of the council, W. L. Ames and T. L. Wilson, international vice-presidents of the Machinists' Union, H. W. Churchill, New England organizer, and several other of the most prominent officers in the machinists' union will be present. The conference will be called to order at 10 o'clock, and it is expected to last from three to four days.

Albert E. Pike, business agent of Hoisting and Portable Engineers' Union No. 4, states that a large number of employers have signified their willingness to pay the new wage scale that goes into effect on June 1. He does not anticipate a strike of any magnitude at that time. The men now get 62½ cents an hour for broken time, and ask for 65 cents. The present week price is $24 and they want $25 for a forty-four-hour week.

Stationary Firemen's Union No. 242 has voted to establish a death-benefit of $100, and will put it into effect July 1. Beginning Tuesday, May 23, the executive committee of the local will have a smoker in connection with the meetings held on the fourth Tuesday of each month.

Charles Dood of Chicago, international president of the Piano & Organ Workers' Union, has promised to come to Boston a week from to-day and address a big mass meeting called by the Boston union at Wells Memorial hall, Tuesday evening, May 23.

Dan H. Deegon, office secretary, and A. J. Howlett, business agent of the Carpenters' District Council of Greater Boston, have been re-nominated for the positions. There are twenty-seven local unions affiliated with the council, with a combined membership of 6,000.

J. C. McDonald, business agent of the Constructors' Union, states that every local employer is now paying the new wage scale of $4.50 for journeymen and $3 for helpers, an increase of 25 and 15 cents a day respectively.

Sheet Metal Workers' Union No. 17 holds a special meeting in Paine Memorial Hall to-morrow evening to nominate delegates to the general convention, which will be held at Chicago August 1. A committee also will be appointed to take up the question of formulating a new wage scale, to go into effect January 1, next.

Coal Teamsters' Union No. 68 meets at Wells' Memorial Building this afternoon to receive the report of its wage-scale committee, which has been in consultation with the employers for several weeks trying to secure an increase in wages for the 1,400 union, coal teamsters of Boston.

J. B. Radio and S. Federa, representing the Coat Makers' Union, and H. Reznick, as delegate for the Vest Makers' Union, are in Philadelphia to-day attending a general convention of tailors.

Teamsters' Union No. 25 holds its quarterly re-union at No. 995 Washington street this afternoon, with a special list of speakers, and a social half hour provided by the committee in charge of the event.

Fresh beef, and all food products of cattle, hogs and sheep are among the things which the executive board of District Assembly No. 30, K. of L., incorporated, favor including in the Canadian reciprocity bill. Thomas H. Canning, the national and district master workman, has been ordered to Washington to see if this cannot be brought about. The reciprocity measure, as drawn, only admits live cattle, hogs and sheep.

Boston Barbers' Union has decided to open a downtown day office, the exact location of which will be fixed upon later. The proposition to form an Italian-speaking local in this city has been made a special order of business at the next meeting of the union.

The Woman's Trade Union League has arranged to hold a dancing party at its Warrenton street headquarters next Friday evening. Dancing will be from 8 to 11 o'clock, and light refreshments will be served.

Because of the success attained by Michael J. Young, business agent of Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union No. 7, in securing 56¼ cents an hour for journeymen and 42 cents for helpers on May 1 without a general strike, the union has voted to increase his own salary $5 a week. These men now get $4.50 for an eight-hour day, as against the $2.75 paid for ten hours in Boston before they had a union.

Henry Kiley, Michael Brennan and James Blake, are the nominees to be voted on at the next meeting of Boston Newspaper Mailers' Union as delegates to the San Francisco conventions of the International Typographical Union and the Mailers' District Trade Council. Two delegates will be sent to these conventions.

STATE SEA-FIGHTERS TRAINING FOR CRUISE

Massachusetts Naval Brigade Engages Nightly in Practicing Mimic Warfare.

"Last night during a heavy storm, while the vessel rolled and pitched in a tremendous sea, gun crew No. 2 of the forward port turret of the U. S. cruiser Chicago fired ten deadly shots into the side of the enemies' vessel, sinking her within ten minutes."

Captains of the Massachusetts Naval brigade in all parts of the State are sending in reports similar to the above as a part of their preliminary training before going to sea on their annual cruise. The cruise starts July 16 and will last for sixteen days instead of eight days, as formerly. And the preparation for the formerly.

Each company of the naval brigade has been given a four-inch rapid-fire gun which is exactly like the ones on the Chicago and these are being used for practice work. It is used in aiming, sighting and training, and the results achieved by this practise, it is estimated, will be of tremendous value when the men really get into their sea togs and work at the guns.

Every condition at sea is being taken into consideration in this practise. It is not the old stereotyped, "Load, aim and fire," of the land batteries. The captains are taking into consideration that the guns must be fired when the sea is rough, when storms are buffeting the cruiser on her beams end and when the scuppers are flooded.

Co's A, B, C and the first and second engineering divisions of the Massachusetts naval brigade, all Boston companies, will take a prominent part in the cruise.

The naval brigade of Connecticut and Rhode Island will also participate in the cruise on the vessels assigned to their use. The Chicago will be the flagship of the fleet.

FIRST CUSTOM APPEAL.

U. S. Supreme Court Asked to Review Case From the New Court.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The proper customs tax on containers of glycerine afforded the basis for the first case to come before the Supreme Court of the United States from the new court of Customs Appeals. Importers asked the court to-day to review the decree of the Customs Court adverse to them. The controversy is whether or not the provision of the Payne-Aldrich tariff act, applying to "cylindrical or tubular tanks on vessels for holding gas, liquids or other material, whether full or not," includes the usual containers of merchandise.

To Aid Guild's Work.

St. Mary's Guild of the Immaculate Conception Church of Everett is planning another dancing party before the Summer season, to assist in raising funds for the furtherance of the work of the guild. The dance will be held in Marie Hall, Malden, but the date has not been set.

BOSTON INFANTS' HOSPITAL IN NEED

Boston's Infants' Hospital, located on Blossom street, in the heart of the congested West End, is in a critical financial crisis, and unless something is done for it soon the city may lose one of the most splendid institutions in New England.

The hospital has a new building in course of construction near the Harvard Medical School. It is up to the cornice and there is enough money to complete the shell, but nothing to finish the interior and furnish it so that it may be utilized for the purpose intended.

The quarters in Blossom street are inadequate, and during the three hottest months in the year just when the work is most needed—it has been found necessary to close the institution there. It became apparent last year that new quarters must be found, and the new building, partially completed, is the result.

The Infants' Hospital has done a noble work in the way of teaching how infants and children should be cared for. The lives of hundreds of babies have been saved through its instrumentalities.

It is hoped that some way may be devised to help the institution at a tea which will be held at the Harvard Medical School on May 24. President Eliot, President Lowell, Bishop Lawrence, and Dr. J. Collins Warren will be the speakers on that occasion. It is their hope and that of the other supporters of the Infants' Hospital that the books of Kidder, Peabody & Co., treasurers of the fund, will give evidence that there are thousands who recognize the value of the institution and the necessity of caring for the little ones who are too weak and helpless to care for themselves.

BISHOP QUIETS FROGS.

Railroad Commissioner Making B. & M. a Noiseless Road.

Traveling men who make headquarters at the Hamilton Hotel, in Holyoke, are pleased because Railroad Commissioner George W. Bishop recently slept in the hotel, for they will be better able to slumber there in the future. A short distance in the rear of the hotel is the yard of the Boston & Maine Railroad Company. Commissioner Bishop was unable to sleep during the night, as the switcher and its trailing cars kept pounding over the old frogs in the yard. He was so angry in the morning that he sent Inspector Daniel Wheeler to Yardmaster Loomis with an order to put in a rush order for new frogs and improvements in the yard at once. They are now being installed. Traveling men all agree that it is nice to be a railroad commissioner.

"See America First."

Governor Foss has received a letter from Governor Crothers of Maryland inviting the participation of Massachusetts in a "See Europe if you will but See America first" Convention, to be held at Baltimore in the week beginning [illegible] 22, 1912. It is planned to have every State in the Union advertise with exhibits, its attractiveness to tourists. Governor Foss has the matter under advisement.

CIVIL WAR MOVES UP GOLDEN WEDDING

A golden wedding celebration took place last night in Medford which would not have been due till next October if it had not been hastened by the Civil War.

Fifty years ago Benjamin F. Wright, then a young man of the old North End of Boston, was betrothed to Miss Rebecca Rowe, a native of Rockport, and who had recently come to Boston to work. They planned to wed in October, 1861. But, on Lincoln's first call for troops, Mr. Wright enlisted and raised a company in Charlestown. This was Company I, Eleventh Massachusetts. He went to the war as captain of that company.

Captain Wright and Miss Rowe decided to marry before the young soldier went to the front. The wedding took place on May 13, 1861, in Charlestown, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Henry C. Graves.

The gathering last night was distinctly a family one though many friends called during the day to offer congratulations. The immediate family at the Wright home consists of Captain and Mrs. Wright and Mrs. Wright's nephew, Ralph H. Rowe.

Two of the sons of Captain and Mrs. Wright were present during the evening with their families. These include Mr. and Mrs. John Wright Rowe and three children of Boston and Mr. and Mrs. William Wright of New York City. The third son, George H. Wright of Chicago, was unable to be present but sent gifts and congratulations.

"SNAPS" ARE BARRED OUT AT WELLESLEY

Wellesley College girls are warned not to fool themselves trying to pick out "snap" courses. The College News says editorially in its current issue:

"It takes forethought and clear, consecutive thinking to plan our courses intelligently as they ought to be planned. It is easier to put off choosing them, than to take a course because everyone else is planning to take it, or because no final examination in it is given, or even, alas! because it has the reputation of being a "snap." But beware! The course that everyone takes may become too large to be handled satisfactorily; the final examination you may some day discover to be not only beneficial but pleasurable; the course that was a "snap" for your roommate may turn out to be the hardest course you ever took. Why not adopt an entirely different standard—why not go, gleefully and with determination, for the most absorbing, perhaps, the hardest, courses that you can take, the courses that will develop your intellectual muscle, make the whole earth new before you, inspire you with a great desire for working? There are such courses—many, many of them—and they are the ones that put a keen edge on your mind and make it a fit tool for work that counts."

OPPENHEIM MAY FIND IDEAL WOMAN HERE

Marbe E. Phillips Oppenheim, the English novelist who comes here [illegible] to visit his wife's relatives in Chelsea, will be able, after [illegible] about Boston, to delineate his ideal of woman in some future book.

He has never succeeded, so far as he [illegible] his ideal [illegible] woman, [illegible] his great difficulty, a show [illegible] that he [illegible] understand.

[illegible] yesterday Mr. Oppenheim [illegible] women, especially American women [illegible] by saying

[illegible] his thoughts, actions and [illegible] by a few well known [illegible] much more mechanical, [illegible] woman. Another man [illegible] him, can divine what [illegible] instances he is going [illegible]

[illegible] I get to have a friendly feeling for my men characters—when it is finished I want to shake hands and say [illegible] old chap. Won't you have a [illegible] before you go?"

But women [illegible] great difficulty. I don't [illegible] If the public [illegible] about [illegible] one for [illegible] of [illegible] possible [illegible] enough to know [illegible] she will be [illegible]

Yet to Draw Ideal Character.

"Oh, [illegible]," Mr. Oppenheim answered [illegible] question. "If I could take [illegible] to a formula, I suppose [illegible] satisfied with them [illegible] any.

"The ideal woman [illegible] very [illegible] very, [illegible] you get it done and by way of variety, [illegible] should be obliged to start all over again every little while.

[illegible] the brain to understand him [illegible] his [illegible]

Women Need Humor

"Do you know I should say the most important quality for a woman to possess is a sense of humor. After all, a sense of humor is only a sense of proportion. It keeps a woman from [illegible], from boring you, you know. Yes, that's it—the ideal woman is one whose sense of humor keeps her under all conditions from being [illegible]."

"Do you think you will ever portray a [illegible]?" he was asked.

[illegible] interested in [illegible] I attended the first performance [illegible] play by Jerome. Jerome [illegible] with the suffrage question [illegible] little just now, but it fell rather [illegible]

[illegible] about as interesting as [illegible]

There's no reason now why [illegible] should properly or a widow [illegible] household to represent her shouldn't vote just as well as a man," Mr. Oppenheim added. "But that two persons in one house should each have a vote seems to me ridiculous. But [illegible] I don't know [illegible] interested in the suffrage question [illegible] here.

Saxons in Appearance.

"What a lot of your women lunch with each other at the restaurants, don't they? Now in England a woman [illegible] would have her man along. But here [illegible] girls of twenty or twenty-five lunch with each other. Really it is quite a bewildering sight.

"Looking at your women, you know I can't make up my mind whether I'm in London or Paris.

"You have the faces and figures of Saxon women, but the clothes of French women. And you wear them like French women. There are, of course, English women who get their clothes in Paris, but they don't put them on so well. They're more careless, not so neat as you are.

"I like to go about in the restaurants of strange cities," Mr. Oppenheim continued. "I've got many of my plots in restaurants just watching a little party at one of the tables. I begin to wonder what they are for—what they are saying to each other—and before I know it I have a story."

GUILD FOR UNIFORMITY.

Ambassador Tells Shorthand Writer's It's Needed in Laws.

At the eighth annual convention of Chandler Shorthand Writers from the public schools of New England at the [illegible] Governor Curtis, [illegible] Ambassador to Russia, [illegible] system in shorthand, compared it with the need of uniformity of laws in America by saying: "If it's a good thing to keep evil divorce laws out of Massachusetts, its also a good thing to keep them out of Reno, Nev." President Frederick W. Hamilton of Tufts spoke briefly on stenography as a valuable asset. An opening address was made by Miss Florence E. Stacy, president of the Chandler Shorthand Teachers' Association, who was chairman of the convention. A dictation exercise was conducted by Mrs. M. B. Upton, the class being composed of pupils from several high schools, and there were sight reading exercises of shorthand from stereopticon slides by volunteers to illustrate the advantage of uniformity of writing in public schools.

400 PORTUGUESE SAIL.

Immigrants Go to Azores for St. Michael's Festival.

PROVIDENCE, May 13.—Four hundred Portuguese people from Rhode Island and Massachusetts, most of them from New Bedford and the Cape district, sailed on the Fabre liner Madonna this afternoon for the Azores, where they will debark at St. Michael's in order to participate in the island festival which opens next Saturday. Some of them came from New York. All of them will return after the festivities. The sailing of the Madonna marked the beginning of a new trans-Atlantic service out of this port.

FOLK DANCES AT MAY FETE

There were 500 children present at the May party yesterday afternoon under auspices of the Dorchester Guild in Whitten Hall, Center street, Dorchester the Women's Club house. The dancing was beautifully executed, the girls' many symbolic costumes of the dances presented. "The Aeroplane Girl" was one of the features. Miss Edith Fitzgerald was the soloist. "Autumn Sprites," another distinctive number included as dancers Matilda Lewis, Josephine Kelly, Dorothy Martin, Beatrice Hines, Lucile Wyman, Lou McDonald, Lydia Moore and Helen Norton. May Bergman as the Spirit of Light and Blanche M. Marie in the La Reine dance of Hearts and Flowers were especially attractive. The Tarantella dance on Italian peasants, the Dolly Varden and the Tyrolleno dances won applause.

PORCUPINE FIELDS OPEN TO OPERATORS

Gold Field of Canada Offers an Attraction to Those Who Seek Rich Minerals.

Special Correspondent to American.

PORCUPINE, Ont., May 13.—With the week just completed Porcupine has practically seen the close of the transportation period, and the hum of Summer activity begins to be heard. For the benefit of those not familiar with this country, it should be explained that the Porcupine district has been until now without direct railroad communication, the nearest railway station being Keso on the Toronto and Northern Ontario railroad. It has, therefore, been required that all supplies be hauled by teams thirty-two miles over the trail.

By the time this letter reaches the press, however, the regular train will have begun to run each night between Keso and the Frederick House, and by June, trains are promised as far as Golden City.

Golden City (Porcupine City) lies upon the northeastern shore of Porcupine Lake, and will be the first stop of the government railroad, which will then pass around the eastern side of the lake. Its next station will be upon what is known as the McDougal Vet (Lake View Townsite), where a town has been planned. South Porcupine, on the southwestern edge of the shore, is about one-half mile from where this station will be located. A town of considerable size has been built there, including stores, supply houses, dwellings and offices.

No Seasons in Mining.

Before leaving entirely the climatic conditions of the "North Country," as this section of Ontario is locally called, it is but fair to correct a general misunderstanding indicated by the frequent question as to whether or not mining operations are not limited here by the brevity of the Summer season. There are absolutely no seasons in mining here, not a single month out of the twelve in which aggressive mining cannot go on.

Until better wagon roads are provided the mines will probably continue to accumulate their supplies, especially their heavy machinery, during the Winter months, but the drive of the drill, the sinking of the shaft, or the drifting of underground levels, proceed with equal despatch, either in the dead of Winter or the height of Summer.

This, however, is not true with regard to prospecting or surface exploration. The amount of snow to be shoveled in Winter, in order to prospect a property, greatly discourages that character of work. The most aggressive prospecting begins about the first of May, when the last of the snow disappears from the bush, and the small streams and lakes contain no ice to interfere with canoeing.

During the last three weeks there has been an unusual influx of all classes of mining men from Goldfield, Nevada, and every newcomer from that section tells of many of his friends preparing to leave that territory for this new field of promise.

First Discovery in 1907.

While the first discoveries in Porcupine, at least the first discoveries leading to its present development, were made by Hunter in 1907, it was not until August, 1909, that Miller, Wilson and Hollinger produced the first specimens that gave the mining world a thrill; hence it may be said that the camp is only about a year and a half old, and from a standpoint of age alone still in its infancy. But it is a lusty infant, indeed. Never before has a camp produced so many mines of such richness within so short a period. In two properties—the Dome and the Hollinger—millions of ore have been blocked out. At least two, the Hollinger and the Porcupine gold mines ("Vipond"), are now producing, and at least seven others have by drilling and mine operation already proven to a comparative certainty their ability to make profit. [illegible] including the West Dome, the Dome Mines, Foley, O'Brien, the Hollinger, the Standard, the Swastika and the Crown Chartered, while many others have remarkable showings, which put the chances of successful operations in their favor, including in Tisdale township, the Armstrong McGibbon, the McIntyre, the Porcupine Gold Ridge, Pearl Lake and the Dome Extension, in Deloro, the Preston East Dome, the Powell, the Porcupine Niagara and the Deloro Porcupine; in Whitney, the Scottish Ontario and the Porcupine Lake.

Townships Practically Staked.

Practically all of the townships of Tisdale, Deloro, Whitney and Shaw have been staked, including even the fractions, and the greater portion of them have passed out of the hands of the prospectors into the hands of people who expect to develop them, and the prospectors, thus relieved, are scattering out in every direction. The greater part of them, however, are attracted by what is known as the Cripple Creek District, including the townships of Whitesides, Turner and every day reports of good showings are coming from that district. The best strikes so far have been made in Whitesides. Already frequent sales of properties at good prices have been made and the local mining body seem to look upon it as the natural extension of Porcupine operations.

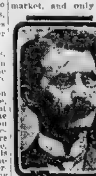
The Birk-Elliott claims, lot 9, concession 1, Tisdale, has been acquired by Montreal interests, and capitalized at $2,000,000 as the Porcupine Reserve Mines. This company will also have some holdings in Deloro. R. W. Norrington, vice-president of the Imperial and president of the Niagara, is secretary and treasurer of the new company.

The Butler Vet, which adjoins the Dome Extension on the east in Tisdale, recently changed hands. The price is understood to be $55,000. The property is well located, but being a veteran tract, and for this reason not requiring assessment work, it has not as yet been thoroughly explored.

STEEL MOST ACTIVE IN A DULL MARKET

Only 17,000 Shares Sold and Total Trade for Day Was Only 70,000 Shares.

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.



NEW YORK, May 13.—Steel was the most active stock in to-day's Wall street market, and only about 17,000 shares of that changed hands. Total trading for the day was about 70,000 shares and price changes were of no importance. All the financial world took a holiday in preparation for the excitement that is expected to prevail Monday if the Supreme Court renders its decision in the tobacco and oil cases.

There is no doubt that the steel trade is in a condition of great depression, but the investigation by Congress, which was expected to produce great results for the bears, has already failed of its purpose.

Part of this failure is, no doubt, due to the publication of speeches made at the Gary dinner to members of the Steel and Iron Institute. In one of these, President Farrell, of the Steel Corporation made it clear that there was a world-wide Steel Trust, and that prices would be maintained regardless of the tariff or other developments. The Steel Trust reported that on May 1 it had about one-quarter of a million less tons of unfilled orders on its books than on the first of the previous month.

Dividend Cuts Have Little Effect.

Reduction of the dividends of the Boston & Maine and of the Vandalia had no influence on prices, chiefly because rail roads as a whole are reporting earnings which justify current dividends. One thing that is making the bears uncomfortable is the thought that if the railroads can earn their dividends in these dull times liberal surpluses must accumulate on the first sign of activity in business.

The Government crop report showed almost a record outlook. The Mexican situation continued a disturbing factor, but the capture of Juarez was accepted as a bullish feature marketwise, because it will tend to hasten peace negotiations. Reports from Canada and from Washington indicate that reciprocity will fail this year in both countries. Organized opposition to the measure has developed in the American Senate.

To Amend Anti-Trust Law.

Congressman Jefferson M. Levy has introduced a bill amending the Sherman Anti-Trust law by insertion of the word "unreasonable" so as to make the law apply only to "unreasonable combinations" in restraint of trade.

This amendment has been ignored by politicians, but lawyers believe it will be found in line with the Supreme Court's decision in the Standard Oil case, as the Court will be compelled to read the word "unreasonable" into the law in order to make any decision at all.

PORCUPINE STOCKS.

Strength was general in the Porcupine stocks during the week. Rea Mines, Ltd., advanced from $6 to $7¾, Dome from $1¾ to $4¾ and Porcupine Gold Mines reached 68c. Slight reactions took place in a few issues toward the end of the week, but the strong demand resulted in average higher prices.

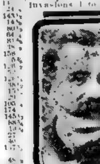
BEEF BARON BOOM IN SOUTH AMERICA

Chicago Packers Making Millionaires Out of Argentina, but Keeping Beef from U. S.

By BOERSIANER.



CHICAGO, May 13.—When Chicago packers made their first tentative invasions [illegible] Argentine Republic [illegible] were [illegible] considerations of their own future [illegible] of course [illegible] they say [illegible] [illegible]

For the sale of land in Argentina risen enormously in consequence development of the meat [illegible] try. American methods [illegible] have made [illegible] [illegible] made [illegible] [illegible] Chicago [illegible] [illegible] of the United States [illegible] [illegible]

Swift and Armour [illegible] [illegible] made [illegible] available for European [illegible] [illegible] before [illegible] cheaper and more satisfactory refrigerated beef than [illegible] cattle over the long ocean voyage [illegible] the packing [illegible] of the United States. [illegible] stock had been kept by the [illegible] British [illegible] and thus the Argentine cattle [illegible] derived of the best [illegible] introduction of Chicago methods [illegible] brought a change quickly [illegible] creased prices of live stock [illegible] Owners of large areas of pasture which at one time had looked [illegible] pressed in acres [illegible] themselves wealthy. They were [illegible] to improve breeds and to cultivate [illegible] for the fattening of animals.

Mutterings of Discontent

Although Argentina is no hotbed of sociological theory, grumbling is already heard over the unearned increment of the big land owners. Some of the large fortunes have been made by British subjects who bought land in the province of Buenos Ayres when its value was insignificant and devoted themselves to sheep farming. Others were far seeing enough to take land in the Rio Negro territory offered them in 1877 and 1878 at a price equivalent to 15 cents an acre. The sales were made by the authorities to obtain funds for military expeditions against the Indians. What the discontented Argentine Republicans object to is that the owners have become millionaires without adequate contribution being exacted from them toward the national expenditure.

The Chicago packers have never given any exact statement of their South American operations and they have remained somewhat of a mystery. It has been reported that the $15,000,000 raised by Swift & Company by the sale of new stock last January was used in part to extend the company's business in Argentina. The beef barons have never sought to introduce South American meat in this country. The idea of the importation of the article into the United States has always been discouraged.

Kept From United States.

Whenever the suggestion has been broached, the objection has always sprung from somewhere that the American palate could never endure Argentine beef. Particularly, whenever "free meat" has been urged for the tariff schedules, the unpalatableness of the South American steer becomes notorious. At such times, we are told, the delicacy of the Yankee carnivorian is the most exacting known. As a matter of fact, the American palate has not been put to the test, and with American packers getting a controlling grip on the Argentine abattoirs, is the test ever likely to be made?

Will the packers compete against themselves?

Agriculture generally, which has been stimulated by the activity in the animal industry has added greatly to the value of Argentine lands. The room for development is still vast. The area of the country is 738,304,000 acres, of which only 49,500,000 are under cultivation. Extensive areas, particularly in the northern provinces are not cultivated for want of water or because they consist of marshes needing drainage. A large expenditure is being incurred in works of irrigation where this is possible. One thing the land buyer in Argentine has to guard against when set on the ground in person, and that is the danger of acquiring a stretch of desert land through the medium of fraudulent dealers.

We have not reached the time when South America shall be tempting to American emigration. So far Canada alone has attracted citizens of the United States away from their fatherland to any great extent. Toward the Dominion the movement is becoming more and more noticeable. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1911, immigration into Canada exceeded by 40 per cent. the movement for the preceding twelve months and of the total arrivals, numbering 311,084, as many as 121,451 were citizens of the United States.

Cotton Goods Prices Advance.

Sales in the print cloth market in Fall River last week amounted to about 500,000 pieces. [illegible] prices have advanced a full ⅛ cent on wide goods and 1-16 cent on narrow goods. M. C. D. Borden bought less than one-half the 500,000 pieces for the American Printing Co. [illegible] but his example incited other buyers to more liberal trading. The week's cotton output in the cotton cloth mills at Fall River amounted to 165,000 pieces.

STOCK VALUES NOT DISTURBED

Wonderful Strength; Big Crops and Cheap Money Big Market Factors.

By E. A. WILKINS.

STATE STREET, May 13.—Another Supreme Court session day faces the country Monday. It has resulted only in a lessening of market activity. Values have not been disturbed, for the stock market maintains wonderful strength, considering the lack of outside interest. Big crops, cheap money and plenty of the latter can not help offsetting any unfavorable influences that may happen. Thus far Congress has passed no measures inimical to general business interests, even though it will hold the record for the number of corporations which it desires to be investigated.

Calumet & Hecla at Lowest.

Copper shares neither do one thing or the other except in rare cases. Calumet & Hecla stock is the lowest in years, or to be exact, since 1904, when it touched 435. The metal is below the twelve cent mark, yet the share market shows a hardening tendency in most cases. Coppers have reached a point where they are little effected by unfavorable news and the feeling is becoming more and more prevalent that a change for the better is imminent in them before long. This may be a case of the "wish being father to the thought."

American Telephone stockholders can expect to hear any time now of another stock issue. This was made plain by President Vail in his annual report. The ease of the money market and the excellent demand for high-grade securities would facilitate the disposal of an 8 per cent stock. In fact the market for the stock has been worked up to better enable the company to market an issue of shares.

The Boston & Maine Episode.

The Boston & Maine episode is till fresh in the minds of the people. It has been apparent for some time that such an event was imminent. In fact, the price of the shares has been discounting such action from the very beginning of the year, so that no great surprise was manifested in financial circles. After the first flurry the stock has recovered about one-third of the decline, which immediately followed the announcement of the reduction in the dividend rate from 6 to 4 per cent. The recent advance in wages was $500,000 more than the combined year's dividend on the preferred and common stock. The wage account has been increased during the year by $2,700,000. What will happen to labor unless things improve pretty soon is something that the future will have to answer for.

MAXIMUM PRICES FOR COTTON CROP

Unfavorable Weather Reports Advance Deferred Months; Foreign Sales Off

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, May 13.—With a very active cotton market last week new high levels were reached for the old crop months. The new crop options also advanced partly in sympathy, but also because weather and crop conditions were less favorable. The early months of the new crop were influenced also by the prospective strength of the statistical position probable at the [illegible] of the [illegible] season, September 1. No matter how favorable crop conditions may become, the world's spindles will require [illegible] of their consumption from the [illegible] and September receipts, even if of record proportions, could not be counted on to supply the demand.

At the high prices ruling in Liverpool a considerable reduction in the daily sales was reported. English spinners are said to be sold ahead for nearly all of the current cotton season, which in England is reckoned to October 1, and commitments by European producers have been largely [illegible] covering new crop deliveries of raw material.

Prices Almost Prohibitive

Exports to foreign countries, however, have been 1,000,000 bales since September 1, and even if it were possible to obtain supplies in advance of new crop deliveries, prices in Southern markets rule almost at prohibitive figures. Spot cotton is now quoted in Liverpool [illegible] cents of about 16.15 cents [illegible] which is largely the result of scarcity of good grades. At this price English spinners have been very conservative.

The American market [illegible] governed by speculation more [illegible] by an active American demand for [illegible] raw material. Holdings of actual [illegible] by the larger groups of operators are [illegible] small, and in this respect the market [illegible] more easily controlled than last year when New York stocks were over 200,000 [illegible] and Southern markets were in a position to make large shipments to New York.

Markets Nearly Exhausted

Nearly all accounts agree that the interior markets as well as plantation stocks have not been so thoroughly exhausted in many years, and the hope of relief from that quarter has been abandoned entirely by the makers of short commitments.

Early in the week, crop and weather news was very favorable, a good many sections had suffered from [illegible] much rain, and the [illegible] was [illegible] and needed [illegible] other [illegible] needed rain, and a period of dry weather for the Western belt showed that moisture had not been sufficient in some localities. In the main, however, the crop is believed to be having a fair start with a largely increased acreage and a condition well over that of last season.

In the cotton goods division of the dry goods trade, some large transactions in print cloths have been reported which have relieved the market of pressure in these lines. Holders of cotton goods as a rule realize that pending new crop developments present stocks of goods are ready, [illegible] cheap and little effort [illegible] made to press sales except at full prices. Curtailment by producers is going on mainly because supplies of raw material cannot be obtained, except at such figures as make profitable sales impossible.

Pilot-Butte Books Open Tomorrow

For Your Stock Subscriptions

Balance of 20,000 Shares Offered the Public

Books Close May 30——Stock Issued June 15.

Tuolumne stockholders were given the privilege of buying in advance of this advertisement such stock as they wanted. Their allotments will be made in full. Their purchases have left only 11,000 shares of the 20,000 offering. These 11,000 shares have been set aside for Butte, Mont., and for several Eastern cities. Allotments will be made pro rata if these 11,000 shares are oversubscribed. 2,500 shares have been set aside for this city.

The Pilot-Butte Claim is on the World's Richest Hill

The Pilot-Butte claim is located on the famous Anaconda hill, Butte, Mont., in the heart of the copper zone. Mines on this hill have paid to stockholders upwards of $180,000,000. The same veins from which the richest ore in Butte is mined traverse the Pilot. Three immense copper veins are traceable across the entire length of the claim.

The title of Pilot-Butte rests upon patents from the United States government and has been determined by competent attorneys to be absolute. The claim covers ten and nineteen-one-hundredths acres.

Standing at the Pilot-Butte shaft, now 530 feet deep, you can hear the dumping of a dozen ore skips from as many producing mines. Looking north and west, one sees the Poser and Elm Orlu mines, owned by ex-United States Senator W. A. Clark. The Badger State, Jessie, Berlin, Speculator are all heavy producers in close proximity. The Tuolumne is a little south and east.

A Word About Tuolumne

The personnel of the Pilot-Butte Mining Company and Tuolumne are essentially the same. The Tuolumne stock was sold by advertising, as the same people who sold it are selling the stock of the Pilot-Butte. The Tuolumne stock is now five times its par value, at which it was first sold, and is a heavy dividend payer. It is confidently expected that Pilot will duplicate the success of Tuolumne. The possibilities for large profits are reasonably certain.

Investors will buy Pilot-Butte stock for the same good reasons that they bought Tuolumne—its splendid location, and because they have confidence in its management.

Ed Hickey, the president and principal promoter, occupies a like position for the Tuolumne Copper Mining Company, and was the discoverer of the famous Anaconda mine—the richest copper mine in the world. The entire company is in the hands of practical mining men, who have never been identified with a failure, but who have made millions for their stockholders.

The Terms of Selling

The Pilot-Butte Mining Company is incorporated for 100,000 shares of stock at a par value of $10 a share. Only 20,000 shares of the stock are offered for sale for development purposes. Pilot-Butte stock is non-assessable.

The stock will be sold in five-share lots and in multiples of five—the smallest purchase that can be made being five shares. Each subscription must be accompanied by a certified check for $2 a share on the amount subscribed, the balance of $8 being due and payable upon issue of the stock.

$15.00 to $25.00 Beautiful Silk Gowns & Dresses

On Sale at 10 o'Clock — For $9.00 — On Sale at 10 o'Clock

Two years ago about this time we had a sale of similar dresses. They went like wildfire and created the greatest excitement ever seen in any Women's Suit Dept. in Boston or any other city, some customers buying half a dozen each. We never expected to be able to offer such a bargain again, but we found a manufacturer whose business has been paralyzed by the late, cold spring weather. He came to us and explained his predicament—he had planned and bought accordingly for a warm and early spring and now found himself with hundreds of garments on his hands—he wanted the cash at once.

He Got the Cash! We Got the Dresses At Our Own Price Hence This Phenomenal Bargain!

The silk alone in these dresses cost more than we sell them for ready to wear; in other words, they are all made in the most charming styles imaginable, and the making costs you nothing. The styles are bewitchingly pretty.

Over 60 Different Styles to Chose From

As these $15.00 to $20.00 silk dresses, at $9.00, are almost a present to any woman lucky enough to secure one or more, and the fact that every individual sale will be the biggest kind of an advertisement for our store,

WE HAVE DECIDED NOT TO OPEN THE SALE UNTIL 10 O'CLOCK so that our out-of-town customers can get here without inconvenience and can have an equal chance with all. EVERY WOMAN AND MISS CAN BE FITTED.

Women's Sizes, 32 to 42. Misses' Sizes, 14, 16 and 18 Years

DEMAND FOR HOUSE LOTS IS INCREASING

Large Number of Sales in the Suburbs Are Reported by Operators.

NEW PURCHASERS ACTIVE

Downtown Property in Good Demand for This Time of the Year.

By FRANK A. LAVELLE.

DEALERS and operators in suburban house lots and acreage continue to report many sales in their respective locations. The demand for this kind of real estate is growing daily. Hundreds who have never been in the real estate market before are now buying house lots, and it is the intention of these to hold either for their own future building operations or for investment.

Downtown property is never expected at this time of year to be as active as land operations in the suburbs, but the past week has made quiet a showing in this branch of the business and a number of good dea.s were put through. A number of other large transactions in various parts of the city are pending and brokers are qu.te optimistic of the market for the next few weeks to come.

Papers have passed in the sale of the brick and stone apartment house at Nos. 13 and 15 Pinckney street, Beacon Hill, owned by Elizabeth G. Ford, wife of Patrick F. Ford, to Dr. L. A. Codman, for investment. The assessed valuation is $28,900, of which $13,900 is on the 3,060 square feet of land in the premises. Codman & Street were the brokers.

Many South End Sales.

Papers have been recorded in the sale by the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Company, trustees under the will of Jonas Fitch, late of Boston, to Helen F. Clifford, of the mercantile property at Nos. 1307 to 1317 Washington street, South End, consisting of 3,340 square feet of land and the five-story [illegible] building thereon containing stores and apartments. The total assessed valuation is $23,900, of which $14,200 is on the land. Charles E. Lee negotiated the sale.

Among the sales reported yesterday was the property at No. 17 Yarmouth street, near Columbus avenue, South End, comprising the Hotel Landor and 6,676 square feet of land, which has been sold by Frank B. Currier to Marion E. Pike, the title coming through Lillian J. Bushay. It is all taxed for $30,000, of which $15,000 is on the land.

Henry J. Dyer et al. have sold to David H. Greenhood the three-story and basement swell-front brick house and 1,600 square feet of land at No. 2 Bulfinch street, near Bowdoin square, West End, all assessed for $25,000, of which $18,400 is on the land.

David H. Greenhood has taken title from the Union Institution for Savings to a number of South End properties, as follows: A lot of land at Nos. 204-214 Albany street, corner Lehigh street, containing 10,600 square feet and taxed for $8,000; the two brick houses and 1,800 square feet of land at Nos. 41-43 [illegible] street, corner of Albany street, all assessed for $8,000, of which $4,700 is on the land, and the brick [illegible] square feet of land at No. 43 Oneida street, corner of Albany street, [illegible] taxed for $5,500, of which $2,700 is on the land.

In the same section the three-story brick house and 791 square feet of land at No. 14 Cherry street, near Shawmut avenue, all taxed for $5,800, of which $1,800 is on the land, have been sold by Max L. Pinansky et al., guardians, to Sarah Cirker.

Sales by Henry W. Savage's Office.

BROOKLINE—Henry W. Savage has sold for Frederick S. Bennett the estate at Nos. 38 and 40 Babcock street. The property consists of a frame dwelling house and a three story brick and stone apartment house, together with 11,788 square feet of land. The total assessed valuation is $23,000, of which $6,500 is on the land. The purchaser is K. Giliger who bought for investment.

Henry W. Savage reports the sale of a lot of land on Williston road for W. K. Corey, trustee, to Fred W. Seitz. There are 8,520 square feet in the lot, taxed on a valuation of 40c. per foot.

ALLSTON—Henry W. Savage reports he has sold the new frame three-apartment house at No. 29 Linden street, corner Farrington avenue. The lot contains 2,340 square feet and is taxed on a valuation of 55c. per square foot. The building has not yet been assessed. Arthur O. Jones will convey to Joel Hatheway, who buys for investment.

HYDE PARK—Henry W. Savage has also sold and passed the final papers on the estate at No. 216 Metropolitan avenue. This consists of a two and one-half-story frame house and 9,972 feet of land, all assessed for $2,800, of which $800 is on the land. The price paid was much in excess of the assessed valuation. Adelbert C. Knight of Portland, Maine, conveyed to Mary M. Rainton of East Boston, who bought for a home.

SOMERVILLE—Henry W. Savage reports deeds gone to record in the sale for Isaac Heller of another of his two-family houses on Sycamore street. This is numbered 100 and 102, frame two and one-half story with modern improvements and a lot containing 4,400 feet. The house is assessed for $5,000 and the lot for $1,500, making a total of $6,500. Mary V. Leonard bought for occupancy and investment.

WINTHROP—Henry W. Savage has agreements signed for the sale of the estate at No. 178 Court road for Bessie W. Hazard, consisting of a two and one-half story frame house and 4,250 feet of land, carrying an assessment of $4,700. The purchaser is L. B. Barnes.

MILFORD—Henry W. Savage reports the sale of the Dowling estate, consisting of four acres of land, a house of five rooms and a stable, situated on the car line. The purchaser is L. A. Reed.

Sales by the Edward T. Harrington Company.

WEST ROXBURY—The sale is reported of the property at No. 18 Meredith st., consisting of a single dwelling house of nine rooms with all conveniences, upon a lot of land containing 6,900 square feet, all assessed on a valuation of $4,700, which in no way represents the purchase price. George B. Graff is the grantor, and the purchaser was Herbert W. Adams.

WINTHROP—The Sarah L. Richardson estate of East Boston has sold a tract of land on the westerly side of Pleasant street, comprising 18,748 square feet of land, having a frontage of 200 feet on the water front. It is assessed on a valuation of $4,000 and was sold for cash to Sarah L. Barrett of Malden, who will commence immediately the erection of a $10,000 concrete house for a home.

ARLINGTON—John P. Wyman, trustee, has sold lot 25 on Massachusetts avenue, containing 5,021 square feet, to C. S. Mahoney of Somerville, the same trustee has sold lot 7 on Tufts street containing 6,865 square feet, to John W. Baird of Cambridge. John P. Wyman, trustee, has sold lot 4 on "Wyman terrace," containing 6,767 square feet, to L. Christensen of Arlington, who will build a residence for his own occupancy.

CONCORD—The sale is reported of the David Angier farm on Barrett Mill road, adjoining the Barrett house, one of the most historic in Concord. The farm contains thirty acres of land, upon which is an attractive ten-room house with all modern conveniences, and a large barn. The farm was purchased by George M. Parker of Bedford, who sold his farm through the Harrington Company.

MARLBORO—Wallace W. Foster of Marlboro has sold his farm on Elm street to Edmund A. Duley. There are four acres of land, two of which are in an orchard, bungalow and stable.

ARLINGTON—George W. Allen of Cambridge has purchased of William S. Scrague a lot of land on Freeman street, containing 5,000 square feet.

BEDFORD—M. L. E[illegible] has sold his farm on the road from Bedford Springs to South Billerica, containing about ten acres of land, together with the usual farm buildings. The property was purchased by Robert J. Douglas.

LEXINGTON—The sale is reported of lot 47 Oakmount Park, on Merriam street, containing 14,825 square feet of land, for E. E. Henry to J. L. Murray of Lexington.

Deeds have gone to record conveying title to the new house built by A. O. Washburn, located on Glen road, upon a lot containing 11,000 square feet of land. The property was purchased by G. N. Bicknell, who is already in possession.

EVERETT—The sale is reported of the estate at No. 25 Beacham street, consisting of a two-family house and [illegible] square feet of land. It is assessed on a valuation of $[illegible] and was purchased by the Middlesex Associates, M. A. Surysk being the grantor.

BOXBORO—Deeds have gone to record conveying title to the G. E. Bradford farm, containing about 100 acres of land, upon which are the usual farm buildings. The property was purchased by Charles F. Pierce of Lexington and Laurence T. Pierce of Waterford, Me.

"PINES RIVERBANK," REVERE—The Squire Real Estate Trust has sold to Philip Todor lots 249 and 250 at the corner of Graves road and Davis street, with a total area of 8,398 square feet. They have also sold lot 411 on Sumner road, containing 4,044 square feet, Elizabeth Anderson being the purchaser. Robert McGlann has purchased lot 442 on Patriots' Parkway, containing 4,800 square feet.

ARLINGTON—John P. Wyman, trustee, has sold [illegible] at the corner of Massachusetts avenue [illegible] Wyman terrace, together with [illegible] feet of land, to G. F. Wa[illegible].

"CONCORD RIVER PARK"—At Concord River Park, North Billerica, among the buyers were L. L. East Boston.

Warren F. Freeman of the Kimball building reports the sale for Mary M. McDonald of a very desirable building lot corner of Frankfort and Swift streets, containing 3,300 square feet, to A. A. Parker of Boston, who will improve.

Nahant.

Edgar W. Wait has sold a cottage house and about 7,000 square feet of land in Foxhill road to Joseph L. Barry of Lynn.

Joseph H. Cochey, executor of the will of Catherine Thompson, has given the title to a cottage house and about 8,000 square feet of land fronting on Castle road to Peter Juul.

The Nahant Land Company has conveyed to William A. Bond of Lynn title to 7,500 square feet of land fronting on Valley road. Mr. Bond intends to build a summer cottage.

Templeton.

At Otter River Village, Templeton, the old Stone estate has been sold to McKenney of Baldwinville. The property consists of a large sixteen-room house and an acre of land and formerly belonged to Malcolm Stone, to whose ancestors was granted a tract of land by the government long before the Revolutionary period. It remained in the family intact until the sale yesterday.

Lynn.

Edwin L. R. Bliss has taken title to a two-tenement house and 4,500 square feet of land in Webster street. The deed was given by James L. Taylor and George H. Lampard.

Barnard Eiseman has purchased the estate of Hannah M. Bishop at the corner of Newhall and Suffolk streets, Lynn, consisting of the Bishop homestead and 6,144 square feet of land all taxed on $6,100. The dwelling house will be removed to the rear of the lot, fronting on Suffolk street, and a four-story brick apartment house will be erected to front on the corner.

Moe Mark has disposed of a parcel of land containing about 12,000 square feet in Pierce road, Lynn, near the Lynn Shore Drive, to William O'Shea.

Ashcroft Heights.

Fred J. Dyer has sold a lot, corner of Reed and Williams streets, Ashcroft, Dedham, containing 5,532 square feet of land, through the office of E. E. Hubbard. The purchaser, A. Moore, is already building an attractive residence for occupancy.

MANY LOT SALES AT NUTTING'S LAKE PARK

A. A. Brand Reports One Sale of Thirty-two Lots to a Construction Company.

With a history that is interesting and attractions which appeal to home-seekers and builders, the section known as Nuttings Lake Park, in Billerica, lying north of Lexington, is rapidly filling up with new residents. Nuttings Lake Park comprises most of the territory between the Lexington car line and the Boston & Northern car line and also close to Turnpike station on the Lexington branch of the Boston & Maine. About sixty houses have been erected there within a year, including many beautiful all-the-year-round residences.

A large portion of the dwellings at Nuttings Lake Park are occupied by their owners. The lawns and streets are kept in good condition and most of the shade trees were planted many years ago and they are now of full growth.

A. A. Brand of the company announces the sale of thirty-two lots at Nuttings Lake Park to the Holton Construction Company of Boston, who will begin at once the erection of twelve well-planned bungalows, similar to those they already built on the premises, and they propose to follow these with the improvement of their entire purchase. The houses will be attractive in appearance and will be equipped with all the modern conveniences. A special excursion will be run to the property to-day and all of this week, as announced in the advertisements.

CHARM OF COTTAGES.

Is in Its Individuality and Dissimilarity of Type.

The chief charm of a cottage, it should be remembered, is its individuality, and if, instead of being properly framed, it stands between cottages of a totally dissimilar type, this is difficult to preserve, says the Century Magazine. Therefore, it is well to cut off also the neighbors. I remember a little house on Long Island which was charmingly managed in this respect. It stood on a long, narrow lot far back from the street, with a neighbor on each side not more than fifty yards away, and yet the little place was absolutely apart and a thing by itself. The houses on each side were of different types, but only their roofs were visible. From the house one could not see the street. There was a stretch of lawn framed in blossoming trees but the boundaries were not "planted out" or otherwise defined; instead, the flowering shrubs and low-growing trees parted, giving glimpses across the neighbors' lawns and the effect of much more ample grounds than really existed.

HIDDEN DEFECTS IN REAL ESTATE TITLES

Frequently Cause Cloud on the Buyer's Right and Error in Transfer.

At a recent convention of the Real Estate Association of Western New York the discussion on hidden defects in real estate titles was taken up and discussed by the convention. One of the leading land examiners of the country, Charles S. MacDougal, was called to address the convention to elucidate some of the obscure causes of clouds on buyers' rights said to exist in all the other States of the Union. Here are some of them:

Defective partition and foreclosures, void trusts, forged instruments of every kind, undisclosed heirs, undiscovered wills, mistakes in surveys, mistakes of facts, afterborn and posthumous children and false personations.

"From the real estate broker's viewpoint," continued Mr. MacDougal, "I believe title insurance to be extremely beneficial and even vital. Under the present system were the county clerk's records destroyed it would be a severe blow to the broker's business. The title companies everywhere are making true copies of the records and were a fire to occur, destroying them, these companies would mostly be in a position to furnish any person with a complete history of the whole title. This would be a benefit to the broker as well as the property owner.

"Under the insurance method, information is gathered in one place instead of being scattered among many individuals and consequently difficult to obtain. Generally the search companies are interested only in showing what appears of record. The insurance companies are seeking to make and keep the title in as perfect or as marketable condition as possible.

"Aside from the benefits that come to the real estate broker from the use of title insurance, there is a satisfaction to him in knowing that he has furnished full and adequate protection to a client and placed him, his heirs, widow or devisees in a position to dispose of the property without difficulty or expense to them. We may feel that there is but little danger of loss resulting to the owner from defective titles. Yet those who are in close touch with the transfer of real property know that many losses do occur and that trouble is constantly arising.

BUYS LARGE TRACT.

Louis H. Bonelli Will Develop "Morton Terrace," Dorchester.

Agreements have been signed for the purchase by Louis H. Bonelli of 240,000 square feet of land on Morton street, near Blue Hill avenue, Dorchester. Title will pass from Joseph J. Donohue. Mr. Bonelli, who is a well known auctioneer with offices at No. 60 State street, will develop this large tract and after plotting into house lots will place it on the market. Mr. Bonelli will call this new suburban subdivision "Morton Terrace."

INTEREST SHOWN IN LAND AT ABERDEEN

Two Auction Sales of Property in This District Scheduled for This Week.

Interest in vacant land in the Aberdeen district has been awakened by the announcement of two auctions [illegible] this property the coming week by two different firms.

On next Friday John C. Kiley will auction off twenty-one lots of Aberdeen land on Chestnut Hill and Commonwealth avenue and intersecting streets. The sale will be held for the Aberdeen Land Company at the rooms of the Boston Real Estate Exchange. A minimum price of one half the assessed valuation has been placed on each lot.

The other sale will be that conducted by Bonelli-Adams Company, auctioneers of Boston and New York. It will be held at Aberdeen Park, on Commonwealth avenue, Colonial and Nottingham roads, and seventy-five lots of this property will be disposed of. The sale will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday afternoons.

Aberdeen is known as one of the most desirable suburban residential sections about Boston. It is approached by the finest boulevards in Massachusetts and affords one of the finest panoramic views in the State. It is within easy reach of the city proper. Both of the proposed sales are expected to result in the further development of the district as an ideal residential section.

TO HELP BUY HOMES.

School Children of New York to Organize Associations.

Executive committees of the estate and metropolitan leagues of the urban, suburban and rural savings and loan associations of the State of New York are planning to interest the public school children of the state in thrift by organizing juvenile branches of such co-operative associations, says an exchange. A step in this direction was recently taken by the board of education of Elmira, which gave an association of that city permission to reach the children [illegible]. As showing the possibilities this juvenile branch, organized in November, now has 1,700 children enrolled.

In the commuting zone of New York city there are 50,000 men, women and children enrolled in these associations, and it is conservatively estimated that 20,000 persons are purchasing their homes through this monthly payment plan, which pays for the home in 12 years, at a cost which in many cases does not exceed what was formerly paid for rent.

REPORTS SALE OF MANY SUBURBAN LOTS

Frank W. Coughlin Disposes of a Score of Properties to Homeseekers.

Among the many suburban land developments attracting attention from investors and homeseekers are those of Frank W. Coughlin, with offices in the Old South [illegible].

At Pinehurst Manor, Billerica, Mr. Coughlin reports the following [illegible] in addition to those already reported, lots 849 to 852 on Ridgeway avenue, to A. M. Moss of Dorchester, 305 to 308 on Pinehurst and Ellingwood avenues to George Cauchon of Cambridge, 430 and 431 on Chesterfield and Allandale avenues to Robert Ryan of East Boston, 626 and 627 on Ridgeway avenue to R. Doherty of Roxbury; 360 on Allandale avenue to Charles G. Ray of South Boston; 483 on Chesterfield avenue to E. Dyson of Winchester, and 481 and 482 on Chesterfield avenue to C. Dyson of Winchester.

At Bay View Heights, Cliftondale, another tract that is being developed by Mr. Coughlin, lots sold this last week were 239 and 240 on Emerald Road and Beecham avenues to A. Ford of Lynn; and 246 and 247 on Beecham avenue to Frank P. Palmer of Lynn.

At Bonair Heights, Cliftondale, another Coughlin tract, he has sold lots 17 to 20 on Felmont avenue to C. C. McKenzie of Cliftondale.

At Wilmington Terrace, Wilmington, Mr. Coughlin reports lots 174 to 178 on Munson street to Vessey and Coburn of Boston.

At Holbrook Gardens, Randolph, Mr. Coughlin reports lots 815 and 816 on Englewood avenue and lots 825 and 826 on Patterson avenue to C. E. Foss of Somerville.

At Felsmere, Wakefield, Mr. Coughlin reports lot 32 on Lotus avenue to John Marsinger of Stoneham.

AT CLIFTON HEIGHTS.

Charles M. Conant Reports Sale of Large Tract.

Charles M. Conant, Nos. 640 and 642 Old South building, reports the sale of 100,000 square feet of land, with small cottage and wooden garage, at Clifton Heights, Marblehead. This represents the sale of the final parcel of the Isburgh estate, which Mr. Conant purchased in May, 1910, and which was reported in this paper on May 28. This estate contained about six acres of land, beautifully situated in one of the most sightly locations on the North Shore, upon which there were twelve cottages, all furnished from top to bottom, even to the linen and silver.

Mr. Conant cut this tract into twelve parcels, and the transfer reported to-day completes the sale of the whole tract. Messrs. Charles D. Rice and Herbert D. Foss of Cambridge are the new owners of this last parcel.

MODERN BUILDINGS ALWAYS IN DEMAND

IT'S UP TO THE LANDLORD

[illegible] Always Pay, [illegible]

A [illegible] real estate [illegible] and the effect on renting and sale value were brought out the other day by an operator of long [illegible] investment [illegible].

[illegible] buildings now going [illegible] and decayed [illegible] trustees [illegible] coming to the [illegible] real estate buildings must be improved if they are to bring in a fa[illegible].

"As one of the strong arguments in favor of proper main[illegible] necessary to [illegible] modern office and [illegible] in the downtown distri[illegible] very start [illegible] ments and [illegible] of wide-awake, progressive business and professional men, who are always reaching out for the [illegible].

Landlord Gets a Grouch

The owner of the old building who has not 'kept up with the times' and contents himself with sneering at the extravagance of the present day [illegible] expense of this or that [illegible] instead of making [illegible] own [illegible] away from him [illegible] to content himself with a [illegible] that he formerly refused and finds his building in the class of [illegible].

The same arguments [illegible] flat buildings and residences [illegible] anything is good enough [illegible] rent' soon falls flat [illegible] quality [illegible] the tenant feels he is getting [illegible] more than his money's worth.

The owner who is sufficiently liberal as to acquire the reputation of keeping his building in better [illegible] and treating his tenants with more consideration than the other owners in the neighborhood finds no trouble in getting the best tenants who live in that vicinity.

Betterments Always Pay

"The question of rehabilitating [illegible] and [illegible] rundown property located in fairly good localities should not be overlooked. [illegible] instances [illegible] where [illegible] almost dilapidated structures and [illegible] has brought [illegible] and [illegible].

This has the result of [illegible] others in a general improvement [illegible] this locality, with an increase in [illegible] value of the property in the vicinity [illegible] improvements of a character [illegible] the values, the property and the [illegible] improvements in the neighborhood add materially toward attracting purchasers and to the standing of the property.

"Betterments always bring better rentals, better rentals bring better incomes, higher net incomes bring high sale prices, betterments to localities bring a better class of people, better people again add to the market value and, in a word, work for betterments all along the line."

PLANS MADE FOR BIG REALTY CONVENTION

Great preparations are being made for the meeting of the National Association of Real Estate exchanges, which will be held in Denver, Colo., during the week of July 17.

One of the features being arranged by the committee of the Denver Real Estate Exchange is a gigantic real estate parade.

The sessions of the convention will be held in the auditorium in the day time so that the evenings may be spent at the amusement resorts.

President T. C. Hitchings of the Denver exchange says that a large fund has already been raised for the entertainment of the guests.

The program committee, of which Marvin A. Farr of Chicago is chairman, has devoted a large amount of time to the consideration of a program, and a meeting of the committee will be held in Chicago this month to arrange the final details.

Now that the transportation committee has fixed upon the convention [illegible] tive preparations are being made for a "Convention Special" which will carry the delegates from Chicago to Denver. Those who arrange to go to Denver via Chicago will have an opportunity of viewing the development of a number of Middle Western and Western states.

SALE OF FARM.

Warren F. Freeman Disposes of One of the Last in Roslindale.

Warren F. Freeman of the Kimball building reports the sale of one of the few remaining farms in Roslindale, the Whittemore estate, located on Washington and Florence streets near the new Forest Hills playground, containing ten acres with old homestead and barns, from Parker W. Whittemore, et al. to W. P. Whittemore, trustee, who has divided the estate into 98 lots and is building streets and sewers through the property and will offer the lots for sale through Mr. Freeman's office. For the convenience of customers Mr. Freeman has opened a local office for the sale of this land in the old Whittemore house on the property.

"If You're on Earth, Own a Slice of It"

Why not come out to-day and look over our land in Medford and Malden on the beautiful Middlesex Fells Parkway? Only 8 minutes from Sullivan Sq. (1 1-2 miles) on the Boston Elevated, 4 1-2 miles from State House.

This land must surely increase in value. 26 lots were sold last Sunday. Better come to-day or you will miss it. Land all restricted. Price 3c per foot upward. Houses built on this land rent as high as $30 per suite, so now is your chance.

$5 DOWN, $10 PER MONTH

How to get there:—Take Spot Pond, Stoneham Sq. or Fellsway car at Sullivan Sq. lower level and you will be on the grounds in 8 minutes. Only 17 minutes from Milk St., the heart of Boston. Cars pass our land. Look for office on the corner of Central Ave. and Medford St.

This land is only 3 minutes from 2 lines of steam railroads. School houses within 100 yards. The property is all surrounded by parks. Churches of all denominations. Come to-day!

West Watertown is located just beyond Watertown Square, 6¾ miles due west from Boston Common. The property fronts 2,000 feet on Main street, a macadamized County Boulevard running from Watertown to Waltham, on which electrics run to Boston and Waltham. We have 150 beautiful lots high and dry, with good soil, free from stone and underbrush, some with large shade trees. Ideal bungalow sites, and from the higher ground an excellent view may be had of the surrounding towns. The lots are away from the salt water and east winds. West Watertown has schools, stores, churches, electric cars and West Watertown R. R. Station. Water, sewer and electric lights are in many of the streets, gas has recently been put in one of the streets, 41 houses are already built. A five-mile circle from West Watertown passes through or includes five cities and eleven towns, having a population of over one million people.

Latest Music IN Your Home

Long and tedious practice has always been required heretofore to become adept enough to play and entertain your friends on the piano.

Autopiano

makes it possible or those who cannot spare the time to practice to render the most difficult compositions as skilfully as an expert pianist.

Buy an Autopiano by Renting It

You need a piano and object to the instalment system, and are endeavoring to pay cash for YOUR instrument. The plan we offer makes it possible to secure a piano and enjoy it without obligation AT ONCE thus: SIMPLY HIRE A PIANO from us and we allow all the rent to go towards the purchase price. The accumulation of these monthly rental payments will simply surprise you. Through this plan you hire the instrument a year or two; you will never notice any financial inconvenience through it, and then it's yours.

Money to Loan.

SEVEN REASONS

Why you should borrow from us. 1. You need no security, just your plain note. 2. You do not need an indorser. 3. We will forfeit $100 to a charitable institution if we notify your employer or friends of your intention to borrow from us. 4. You can get your loan at once. 5. You can pay it back in small payments. 6. You don't ride in an elevator where you are liable to meet your employer or friends. 7. Last but not least, we only charge you 1 per cent. interest on each $1 you borrow from us up to $100 with a written agreement not to change you, and interest if you are dissatisfied. Come and talk it over in our private office. WAGE EARNERS' LOAN ASS'N, 10 State st.

PRIVATE LOANS

TO salaried employes without security or indorser at cheaper rates and easier terms than anywhere else in Boston.

If you have a loan elsewhere bring in your receipts and we will show you how much you can save by borrowing from us. Having loans elsewhere is no bar to your getting loans here.

Credit once established with us is as good as a bank account in time of need.

WHAT'S DOING AND WHY IN THE LEGISLATIVE AND POLITICAL ARENA

By A. POLITICAL SHARPE.

THE Massachusetts Senate has done many surprising things. Members elected as Democrats have played parts in some of them. But the action of seven Democratic Senators in helping to kill the Henebery trolley franchise bill a few days ago was more than surprising. It was disgraceful.

You probably remember the neat, punchy-languaged platform adopted at the last Democratic State convention. Do you remember this?

"Plank No. 9—Local self government."

And this?

"Plank No. 17—The record of the Democrats of the last Legislature is the party's guaranty that we not only promise, but perform."

And do you also remember the statement of doctrine adopted at the same convention in which the platform planks were dealt with at length? Do you remember what it said about Plank No. 17?

"We call attention to the fact that the Democratic members of the last Legislature, though in the minority, vindicated every one of our platform pledges."

* * *

Here Are Their Names.

It is respectfully suggested that if the Senator from your district was elected as a Democrat and if he voted against the Henebery bill the other day, you call the foregoing Democratic planks to his attention and ask him to explain. In case you don't know who the seven Democratic pledge-breakers were, here are their names:

Curley of Roxbury, Doyle of Boston, Grainger of Winthrop, Lomasney of Boston, Murray of Dorchester, Powers of South Boston and Timilty of Roxbury. Another Democrat, Hatton of Charlestown, did not vote at all.

* * *

The Henebery Bill. What It Would Do.

NOW for a word as to the bill itself. It was filed by Representative Michael A. Henebery of Worcester, a young man who has shown himself thus far in his legislative career to be a real Democrat. It provides, first of all, for discontinuing the present practice of giving away valuable [illegible] forever and for nothing. It provides secondly [illegible] cities and towns [illegible] and taxpayers shall have the right to say whether or not their public streets shall be burdened by allowing street railways to run freight and express cars through them.

The bill, stripped [illegible] of the verbiage [illegible] up that is the verb used by the traction lawyers—by providing that when a trolley freight and express business is [illegible] two sides of a city or town the Railroad Commission shall be the deciding body as to the advisability of supplying the missing link.

You are entitled to your own opinion as to whether or not the Henebery bill is a "local self government" measure. You are also entitled to your own opinion as to whether or not the seven Democrats who voted against it were guilty of scrapping their pledges in Planks 9 and 17 of the last Democratic State platform.

* * *

Why They Did It.

IN glancing over the list of Democratic pledge-breakers you might get the impression that the Boston Elevated was the cause of the Henebery bill's defeat. Wrong. The real power behind the opposition was the Boston & Northern-Old Colony outfit.

It was the Boston & Northern-Old Colony lobby that induced the Legislature of 1907 to play football with the then established policy of Massachusetts by providing that franchises which had been granted up to that time for limited periods should be granted thereafter forever and a day. It was also the Boston & Northern-Old Colony lobby which had the statutes of Massachusetts doctored so that the Railroad Commission, instead of local communities, should have the deciding power in the granting of trolley freight and express franchises.

This bit of statute doctoring followed the failure of the Old Colony to get a freight and express franchise through the City of Quincy on the Old Colony's own terms. It might be observed here that the Boston & Northern-Old Colony folks have had pretty fair luck in dealings with the Massachusetts Railroad Commission.

* * *

"Jim Powers Asked Me To—And Jimmie's a Good Kid."

AN inquisitive reporter took the trouble to ask some of the Democratic pledge-breakers why they did it. The several answers can be summarized in the answer which one Senator made, to wit:

Jimmie is a good kid. No dispute about that. But he's a very busy chap, and the chances are that he didn't commit the last Democratic State platform to memory. He will be pleased, no doubt, to have his South Boston brethren call his attention to Planks 9 and 17.

The Henebery bill comes up again in the Senate next Tuesday. The question will be on reconsidering the walloping administered to it a few days ago. Eighteen votes, including the pairs, were cast in favor of it on the last roll call. If the friends of the bill stick to it Jimmie Powers and two others can secure the bill's passage.

Watch the vote. Next Tuesday.

Can Chase Collect?

THERE are always plenty of problems to be solved in and around the State House. But the one which has most of the wiseacres guessing just now is the "three C's" puzzle. Can Chase Collect? Mr. Chase hopes the Governor will retain him as an expert to investigate and solve the problem. A well known State official named Elmer A. Stevens is also a candidate for this job.

You've heard, of course, about the opinion handed down by Attorney-General Swift the other day that Harvey S. Chase not only had no right under the law to make the supplementary examination which he wanted to make into the State Treasurer's department, but that he had no right under law to make the original examination which Treasurer Stevens permitted him to make.

Swift's point was that the act of this year's Legislature, which authorized examinations into State departments, authorized the same only for the Governor's guidance on matters pending before him, and that as the necessities from the State Treasurer's office had already been passed on there was no legal warrant for Chase's probe into that department.

Hence the three C's puzzle. Can Chase Collect?

Is Swift's statement that Chase's investigation of the Treasurer's office was without authority under the law another way of saying that the investigation was illegal?

If the investigation was illegal, what about the principle of law that one cannot recover for work which was contracted for illegally? Furthermore, if the contract to investigate the Treasurer's department was illegal and if all of Expert Chase's work is being done under one blanket contract, what about the principle of law that if illegal work is contracted for in any clause of a contract the whole contract is void?

Hurry up, somebody, and solve the three C's puzzle before Mr. Chase's hand-me-back whiskers have turned white. It's a mere matter of $50 per day for Mr. Chase himself plus the salaries of his assistants.

* * *

The Carter Amendments. They Were Whipped, But—

THE Lomasney amendments to the Boston City Charter got an awful kick in the ribs from the State Senate the other day. The result thus far is that Boston has been saved for a [illegible] or it may not. You can take it for a fact, however, that the charter amendments would have passed the Senate if the vote had been taken a month ago. You can take it for another fact that it cost a lot of money to defeat the amendments. A good part of it was spent at a well-known [illegible] State House, where several Senators were taken to [illegible] the [illegible] outlined.

Baier and Jackson, And the Walk Test.

UP on Beacon Hill, in the Governor's office, they're telling an interesting story about two candidates for the Boston Police Commissionership and the test of fitness to which the Governor subjected them a few days ago. The two would-be commissioners are Ethelbert Baier, formerly of West Tonawanda, New York, and formerly of the United States Secret Service, and George A. Jackson, retired business man and neighbor of the Governor in Jamaica Plain.

Baier and Jackson dropped in to see the Governor at different times. Each told His Excellency that, of course, he hated to talk about himself, but really, don't you know, if His Excellency wanted the Boston police department to be run as it ought to be run, the best thing to do was to settle the matter right now and give him the job.

The Governor didn't promise. But he gave them hope. He told each of them separately, to be at his house in Jamaica Plain at 7 o'clock on a certain morning—the same morning in each case—"and we'll walk into town together and talk the thing over."

They both showed up, and the party walked into town, three abreast. The Governor set the pace, and the Governor is some walker. Incidentally, he was some listener on this particular morning. He was confidentially tipped off in one ear that if Boston is to be the right kind of a burg her next Police Commissioner must be a fellow by the name of Ethelbert Baier. In the other ear he was advised that the talent out Jamaica Plain way has it over all others in the matter of qualifications to fill the Governorship, the Police Commissionership and other responsible offices.

The morning walk did not decide the name of the next Police Commissioner. But there are two candidates for the place who have a slight conception of what it means to patrol a route for seven hours without food or rest.

Legislative Tidbits.

EXTRA! Norman White and Harvey Chase ate lunch at the same table in the State House restaurant the other day. Mrs. Trask, the proprietor, was awfully frightened. She doesn't carry any insurance on her cut-glass dishes.

* * *

Representative Callahan of Brighton gave his friends a shock the other day by opposing a bill authorizing cities to supply meals to school children at cost. Surprising, Thomas, in view of the fact that the bill was permissive and not mandatory.

* * *

It is planned to rob the Senate of a chance to kill the memorial to Congress for the direct election of United States Senators by making it a House measure instead of a joint measure. The practice of filing measures requiring action in one branch, instead of two, is getting popular. It is safer.

RAYMOND—Butveiser, I vas looking for you all day yesterday; vhere vas you vhen I vas alone?

CAVERLY—I vas together.

RAYMOND—How iss by you und your family?

CAVERLY—I shouldn't be surprised.

RAYMOND—How many children have you, Julius?

CAVERLY—I don't know, I have not been home since this morning.

RAYMOND—Vot iss it mit this reciprocity mit Canada?

CAVERLY—Reciprocity iss sometings you don't vant, vot some else has got, vot iss no juice to any one, und costs a lot of money to get, und in der end you give it to some one who has no juice for it und who don't vant it.

RAYMOND—Vhy den does Canada vant American industries to support ——?

CAVERLY—Because she can't support herself. Besides, England, der mother country, has all she can do to supply American women mit Counts und Dukes to take away our Gould.

RAYMOND—Are you going to der coromation?

CAVERLY—No, I saw her once, und too much iss enough.

RAYMOND—Saw, who?

CAVERLY—Carrie Nation.

RAYMOND—You misconstrudle my meaning. I mean der coromation of Kink George of Create Britain, und India, und more und yet besides, "here vill be many handsome ladies of title, both heiress and chorus. Der Lords who have no money will have der English actress brides, they vill vear knee satin breeches, und long red ropes, und der Kink vill take der oath vhen he iss presented at court.

CAVERLY—Presented mit vhat?

RAYMOND—Mit der crown.

CAVERLY—I would rather be a Charley Murphy in America than a Kink in a foreign country.

RAYMOND—Murphy iss no Kink.

CAVERLY—No, but he's der Boss.

RAYMOND—Vhat do you think of der new bill about trial marriages?

CAVERLY—All marriages iss trials.

RAYMOND—Do you think now-a-days that marriage iss a failure?

CAVERLY—It iss mit Nat Goodwin.

RAYMOND—I thought all his marriages good vins

CAVERLY—No, his initials are N. G. It iss only a habit.

RAYMOND—In Kansas City they are trying to introduction marriages under bond.

CAVERLY — That's a good thing if you understand it. The bonds of matrimony iss an insurance against desertion. You sign a note for $10,000 in der lady's name of vich you intention to marry und she leaves it mit her people for three years at 6 per centage interest, to be used against you or any time you leave.

RAYMOND—That's just like real estate. I suppose after three years you renew der bond?

CAVERLY—No, you go into bankruptcy.

RAYMOND — Then she iss not marrying for love?

CAVERLY—Not if she can get it any other way.

RAYMOND — Suppose they vant to get a separation before der term is up?

CAVERLY—Then you go to a court of apples und have a cat's clause inserted in der bond.

RAYMOND What has cats got to do mit it?

CAVERLY—A cat's clause iss you being the party of the first part before marriage. Then after marriage you become the party of the third part by putting in a cat's clause if you don't like it you can scratch it

RAYMOND—They say that in Turkey a man does not see his wife's face until they are married Iss that so?

CAVERLY—Sure A man wouldn't take damaged goods after seeing them.

RAYMOND—Vot iss that war mit Mexico?

CAVERLY—That iss no war, that is an insurrection.

RAYMOND Vot iss that insurrection?

CAVERLY An insurrection iss vhen a body of dissatisfied men not large enough to be a government try to do so.

RAYMOND—Oh, I see. They don't succeed but the government ——

CAVERLY Yes; that's it.

RAYMOND Do they fight much there?

CAVERLY Oh, yes.

RAYMOND—But you said the government is satisfied. Then vhat does it vant to do any fighting for?

CAVERLY To make the other side vas satisfied

RAYMOND That's the same as war, ain't it?

CAVERLY—Yes

RAYMOND Then vhy don't they call it a war?

CAVERLY—Because the government thinks it iss not going to get licked

RAYMOND—But if the government gets licked it will be dissatisfied, won't it?

CAVERLY—Of course

RAYMOND—Then if it iss satisfied, und if it gets licked it won't be satisfied, vhy don't they stop fighting each other?

CAVERLY—Because the moving picture people hat a contract mit the insurgents und insurrectos

RAYMOND—Who iss the President of Mexico?

CAVERLY—Diaz is the president.

RAYMOND—Vot iss Manuel Garcia?

CAVERLY He's a Perfecto.

RAYMOND—By the vay, vhere iss your son Ludvig?

CAVERLY—Ludvig vent und got married.

RAYMOND — Iss that a fact. Who did he marriage?

CAVERLY—A vomens.

RAYMOND—Did he make a goot match, yes?

CAVERLY—I should so said. He married a vomens who draws allmony from three ex-husbands.

RAYMOND—I think a man can be happy mit any vomens so long as he don't lofe her.

CAVERLY—Then he iss living a-la-carte.

CAVERLY—No, he vas foolish.

RAYMOND—Vhy?

CAVERLY—Because he had 800 vives und vent und slept mit his father.

RAYMOND—Vat iss it a harem?

CAVERLY—A harem iss a family of happy men incorporated into a trust under the laws of New Jersey.

RAYMOND—Vhy do they call Vashington der city of magnificent distance?

CAVERLY—Because it iss such a long vay between vhat you go after und vhat you get.

RAYMOND—Who iss der President of Mexico?
CAVERLY—Diaz iss der President.
RAYMOND—Vot Is Manuel Garcia?
CAVERLY—He's a Perfecto.

THE COMING OF THE OTHER WOMAN

Characters in the Scene:

JOHN SHARP.....The Lawyer
MRS. CLARK DEAN.....The Wife
MRS. LUCILLE MILLS BURBANK.....The Other Woman
JENNIE.....The Nurse

SCENE—John Sharp's Office. Time 7 P. M.

SHARP:

Well, Mrs. Dean, the trial is going splendidly. We'll come out with flying colors. By to-morrow you'll be a free woman and you can go back to your home——

MRS. DEAN:

My home? No! I wouldn't! I couldn't! There in the old home where we lived together. To turn on every side and find a memory of the old life. No, I'd rather live in the streets.

SHARP:

Mrs. Dean, you are a remarkable woman. You find your husband loves another—— I demand a divorce; he refuses. He fights the case bitterly. You will win sure. This evening's session in court will settle that. The Court will give you a handsome alimony and your home. You refuse both, why?

MRS. D.:

Mr. Sharp, did you ever love?

SHARP (soberly):

Once, Mrs. Dean; she—she is dead.

MRS. D. (softly):

Your wife?

SHARP:

Yes.

MRS. D.:

If you had discovered that she loved another, and loved him so, that, unless she were free, dishonor might follow, wouldn't you give her up? I think you understand now, Mr. Sharp. How much time have we before we must return to court?

SHARP:

Some time yet.

MRS. D. (simply):

I'm so tired.

SHARP:

Go right into the next room where Jennie and the baby are and make yourself comfortable. When you hear my stenographer's buzzer sound three times, will you come right in?

MRS. D.:

Yes. Shall I bring Jennie and the baby, too?

SHARP (thoughtfully):

Yes, bring the baby, too.

MRS. D. (puzzled):

But I can't understand having that baby here?

SHARP:

Wait, and perhaps you'll know. Remember, when I signal.

MRS. D.:

I'll remember. (Exits.)

SHARP (stands looking after her):

Poor woman! There's something radically wrong about this whole business. The man's attitude isn't one of guilt. But why doesn't she explain? Why?

(Enter Lucille.)

LUCILLE:

How do you do, Mr. Sharp? You know, I'm very brave to come here into the camp of the enemy. But woman's curiosity! When I received your note in court this morning, I determined to ignore it. But it was so mysterious and unusual I couldn't resist the temptation to find out what it was all about.

SHARP:

I hope you'll pardon me for my rough questioning when you were on the witness stand this morning.

LUCILLE:

You were a cross old bear. And decidedly curious.

SHARP (watching her narrowly):

There's one thing in your testimony that struck me as absolutely marvelous.

LUCILLE.

And that was——

SHARP:

The charming disregard you have for truth.

LUCILLE:

In other words, I fibbed?

SHARP:

Well, you did trifle with veracity. To begin with, you gave your age as twenty-three.

LUCILLE:

A woman's prerogative, Mr. Sharp. Do I look more?

SHARP:

No, but you act more.

LUCILLE

Experience is a wise teacher, Mr. Sharp.

SHARP:

I deduct that you've had considerable experience, Mrs. Mills-Burbank, with men.

LUCILLE:

As a rule, men are not experiences.

SHARP.

No?

LUCILLE

No, merely experiments.

SHARP:

Listen to me, Mrs. Burbank. I want the truth about this attachment between you and Mrs. Dean's husband.

When I asked you in court this morning on the witness stand, where you were those two days, why didn't you tell me? Why did you turn your head and mumble you couldn't remember? Until I had you on the witness stand this morning, I was firmly convinced that Clark Dean was guilty—faithless to his wife; but when you said you couldn't remember where you had spent those two days, I knew you lied. You showed on the stand to-day that you wanted us to believe you were guilty. And I knew Mr. Dean was telling the truth, although he couldn't prove that he had been out shooting on that island, alone, without one solitary soul to establish his whereabouts. But you know where you were those two days and nights, and you could have proven it. Why didn't you tell?

LUCILLE

Why didn't I tell? (leaning across table and speaking slowly, but with emotion) Because I love him.

SHARP (astonished):

You—you lied; brought shame and dishonor on him; ruined his home; separated him from his wife, because——

LUCILLE:

Because I love him.

SHARP:

He was a fool, he admits that now. He was fascinated by you, like a lot of other men. But, believe me, he's cured.

LUCILLE (in suppressed anger):

What makes you think so?

SHARP (producing letter):

Here is a letter written by Mr. Dean to his wife and received this morning. Would you like me to read it?

LUCILLE.

Yes.

SHARP:

'Alice, dear, I can't let this go on further without telling you the truth. When you came to me that day with the letter of warning you had received, and accused me, I could not answer except to say you don't trust me. But to-day I told the truth. And as for this other woman, I hate her. I hate her. I don't want to see her face again. And I want you to know I have done nothing so wrong that I cannot face you and ask your forgiveness.'

SHARP (folding letter):

They were very happy until you came into their lives and ruined them both. That little woman knew all the time. She knew that the struggle had come—the struggle that comes into the life of every wife—the coming of the other woman. Between the woman he has and the woman he thinks he wants. And then came those two days away from home and the letter of warning. You sent that letter!

LUCILLE

Well, what if I did?

SHARP

You're a woman. You've got a woman's heart hidden away somewhere—the heart of a good woman. There isn't such a thing in the world as a woman with a bad heart, if you can only get through the surface. You've got to show that real heart and help us to right this wrong. I'll call you back on the stand this evening. Tell the truth.

LUCILLE (grimly):

And give him back to her? Say that I lied to take him from her?

SHARP

Do you know what mother love is Mrs. Burbank?

(Lucille is silent for a moment, mentally reviewing her own tragedy.)

LUCILLE:

Yes, I know. I had a child. (Tenderly.) My baby. He's dead.

SHARP:

I've heard the story.

LUCILLE (sharply).

Of course you have. You heard the story as it was told at the clubs and on street corners. The kind of story that's always told about a woman when she's down. But it's never the real story.

SHARP:

If I remember correctly, the baby died

A Striking Scene from Victor H. Smalley's Dramatic Playlet, "The Woman Who Knew," in Which Madame Besson Is Now Starring. Published by Permission of Madame Besson Who Controls All Rights to the Piece.

SHARP: You brought shame and disgrace upon him, ruined his home because—— at home in the father's arms, while the mother was spending the day at a country club, dining with a man friend.

LUCILLE:

Yes, that's the story you heard. And that's the story a sharp, clever lawyer like yourself presented to the judges when they dragged me into court and divorced me.

SHARP.

And, was there more than that?

LUCILLE:

More than that? They didn't tell of the days and nights of misery I spent trying, trying so hard to keep my husband by my side. The long nights alone, waiting, waiting, while he was at the club, somewhere, with his friends. The desperate fight I made, as so many of us do, to hold his love, his interest. The heartaches for the little attentions and caresses, that the woman must have and the man soon forgets. And then, when I was heartsick and lonely, oh, so lonely, and angry, too; the other man came.

SHARP (quietly).

The other man?

LUCILLE:

He always comes into a woman's life. And always he comes just when he shouldn't. The other man always remembers just what the husband forgets. On the pleasant afternoons, the husband phones that he is going to a ball game with a friend. But the other man comes in his machine to take her driving. The other man came into my life just when he shouldn't. I didn't love him. I loved my husband. But I couldn't have my husband; he was tired of me. And I was proud and wanted to show my friends that I didn't care. The day my baby was taken sick I was at the club with the other man. We had gone there in the morning; had lunched there, and I was trying to forget. And then came the message from home—from my husband. He told me the baby was sick. He told me in such a way I didn't believe him. His words ranked with abuse, and we quarreled over the telephone. I didn't go home until late that night. Oh, that night. When we rode up to the house I saw another machine in front—Dr. Goodman's machine. There were bright lights in the room where baby slept. The rest seems like a dream. The servants in the hall. The doctor standing by the window in baby's room. My husband kneeling by the cot, his face buried in his hands. And baby—his face drawn and white, his eyes closed, dead!

Of course, the story they told you sahl nothing about my suffering then. Of how one word of forgiveness, of sympathy, of love from my husband then would have saved me. He didn't believe in me. Didn't believe my heart was broken. Called my grief hysteria, and struck me when I pleaded with him. The same day my baby was buried, I left that home and never went back. Oh, yes, Mr. Sharp, I know what mother love is. Now, perhaps you understand why I'm not particular about how men suffer through me.

SHARP:

But you do have sympathy for the mother. That's what makes me feel sorry for Mr. Dean's wife.

LUCILLE:

Clark Dean's wife; why, she—they—haven't a baby?

SHARP:

Didn't you know?

LUCILLE

He never told me.

SHARP:

Of course not. Married men sometimes forget to mention those little trifles.

LUCILLE:

A baby! Their baby!

SHARP (presses button on his desk. Buzzer heard off stage three times):

Yes, and you're going to take his father from him.

LUCILLE:

Oh, no! no!

(Door opens, enter Mrs. Dean, followed by maid with baby. The two women face each other.)

LUCILLE.

His baby! (Starts to leave. Stops and deliberates.) Mr. Sharp, you asked me a little while ago to right a wrong.

SHARP:

Yes?

LUCILLE (slowly and softly):

I will do it.

SHARP:

Bless your heart! I knew you had a real heart; I knew it. And I'm going to save you that scene in court. Here is a little statement drawn up which will clear up the entire situation. Just sign it right here. (She signs.) Thanks, Mrs. Mills-Burbank.

LUCILLE (wearily and very tired):

Is there anything else, Mr. Sharp?

SHARP:

That's all, thank you. (Takes her hand.) You're a good girl (she goes to door), a good girl.

LUCILLE (one look at Mrs. D. and baby):

Good afternoon, Mr. Sharp.

SHARP:

(Lucille exits. Sharp wipes perspiration from his brow.) Whew! That was a hard fight. (To maid with baby): Well, my dear woman! (Puts hand in pocket and pulls out roll of bills.) Well, my good woman, I want to thank you for letting us use your baby. Here is a ten dollar bill. Is that enough?

(CURTAIN.)

Nature Studies—The Violet

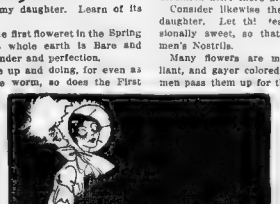
By Dorothy Dix

CONSIDER the Violet, my daughter. Learn of its ways and grow wise.

Behold how it is the first floweret in the Spring and blooms while yet the whole earth is Bare and Cold. So seemeth it a wonder and perfection.

Let this teach thee to be up and doing, for even as the Early Bird getteth the worm, so does the First Maiden on the scene capture the man.



Lo, men are enraptured with the violet's beauty, because it bloometh at a time when there are no other flowers with which to compare it.

Likewise, the homeliest of women is a Lalapaloosa if she is the first female on which a man setteth his eyes after he has passed through a long, cold, hard spell of homesickness, or work, or trouble. Therefore, my daughter, take heed to the value of getting a running start ahead of the bunch, even as the Violet does, so shalt all men desire thee because thou art the First and Only One.

In particular, my child, lay the lesson of the early Violet to thy heart if thou wisheth to marry a widower with country houses and automobiles, yea, and with jewels and silks with which to sugar coat the Pill of matrimony, for behink thee that the first consoler generally wipeth away the tears of the bereaved one and leadeth him to the altar.

Yea, and when a man cometh to a new place, or to a Summer Resort, or emergeth from Wall Street with much money, forget not it is she who is Sally-on-the-spot who drinketh his champagne, and weareth his flowers, and marrieth him if she playeth her cards discreetly, for verily she hath the Edge over the other maidens, even as the Violet hath over the flowers that bloometh after there are also others.

Consider likewise the fragrance of the Violet, my daughter. Let thi teach Thee to be always professionally sweet, so that thou shalt be a perfume in men's Nostrils.

Many flowers are more beautiful, and more brilliant, and gayer colored than the Violet, my child, but men pass them up for the odor of the Violet.

Even so wilt thou see men forsake brilliant and beautiful and gay women to pick out for their wives dowdy, dull, plain little women whose only charm is their Sweetness.

For a beautiful woman a man feareth, and a witty one he hateth, and a gay one he suspecteth, but a sweet woman he loveth and weareth in his Buttonhole. Therefore, my daughter, cut not thy throat with thy tongue by making bright speeches, nor waste thy substance on giddy raiment, or in the parlors of the deceiver who promiseth to perform miracles upon thee, and turn thee into a Living Picture.

But steep thy lips in sugar and oil, so that thou shalt gush over thine enemies, yea, even over the Friend Cat who hath copied thy new imported Spring hat. Push the velvet, and spread the salve, and let thy hand acquire dexterity in passing out the Jolly. So shalt thou reach man's ideal of feminine perfection, which consisteth in being a sweet little thing, and thou canst marry whomsoever thou desireth, whilst those foolish virgins who have mere beauty and brains endeth their days in the Spinsters' Retreat.

Consider also, my daughter, the modesty of the Violet. It taketh credit to itself that it hath but a dull color, and that it doth not flaunt itself in the wind, and it calleth upon us to admire it for these qualities. I bid thee note, my daughter, that nature painted the Violet of a sombre hue and gave it a short stem so that it is not built to flaunt, or call attention to its gaudy reds or pinks. Nevertheless, it hath gained great credit for not doing the things it cannot do.

Learn from this, my daughter, to turn thy defects into virtues. If thou canst not scintillate in conversation, say that thou preferest to listen to the conversation of wise men rather than to Babble thyself. If thou canst not sing in public, say not that thou hast no voice, but that thou art too timid. If thou hast not the Plunks with which to buy diamonds, admit it not, but declare that thou thinkest it vulgar for a woman to adorn herself in Jewelry.

Thereby shall all men proclaim thy modesty, even as they celebrate that of the Violet, whose physical disability hath been Press Agented into fame.

Observe likewise, my daughter, the shy and retiring nature of the Violet which bloometh along the roadway, but observe also, that the only Violet which getteth there is the one that groweth right in a man's pathway, so that he canst not pass by it without falling over it.

Learn from this, my child, that while it is well to be shy and modest, it is profitless to be so where there is no Spot Light turned upon thee. Therefore, be not bold and run not after a man, but emulate the Violet, and occupy a conspicuous place where they cannot possibly overlook thee.

Let him discover thee, for it pleaseth a man that he hath sought out a hidden Violet, but take good care that thou art handy to be found.

Finally, my daughter, observe that the highest priced Violets are grown in hot houses, and those that allureth men most are those in the florist windows of Broadway, and which hath silver foil and purple ribbon bedecking them. Let this teach thee that even the sweetest, shyest, feminine charms are increased by Sophistication, and that no woman is so artless as she who is artful.

Thus from the retiring Violet mayst thou learn how to get on, for, believe me, my daughter, and give heed to my so-ju—every modest Violet that reposeth on a man's lapel knoweth how she got there.

PART OF THE FAMILY.
By Helen Larkins.

WHEN Weber & Fields were booked to appear in Salt Lake City, Lew Fields received a letter from a Mormon friend requesting two passes for the show. Fields hated to issue passes, but this gentleman was a particular friend, so he made an exception in this case, and forwarded this:

"ADMIT BEARER and ONE wife.

FLOORING THE DOORMAN.
By Verna Dalton.

THE doorman at a theatre one evening was taken by surprise when an elderly Irish lady approached him with a ticket in her hand. Evidently she had never been in a playhouse before and was somewhat bewildered. She watched the line passing by, and listened to the doorman calling out "Upstairs" or "Downstairs," according to the tickets handed him.

Finally, he slowly approached and handed in her coupon.

"Upstairs," muttered the doorman.

"Whisper," she said, as she leaned toward him, "can ye tell me on what floor I can see Joseph Murphy?"

A LODGING FOR THE NIGHT.
By Anna Hall.

IT'S awful what we girls have to put up with on the one-night stands that aren't important enough to have a town clock or a postoffice.

Before I joined "Doctor De Luxe" I did a few weeks of barnstorming with a troupe that had no excuse for living except a guardian "angel." One night we were put off at a way station four miles from the town we were to play the next evening. The only man in sight was the station agent.

"You'll have to wait for the morning stage," said he, "if you can't get any rig here."

"But where am I to stop?" I inquired, with a vision of sitting up all night. "There's nothing here except the station, and I can't sleep on the floor."

"Guess you'll have to bunk with the ticket taker," said the man.

"Sir!" I exclaimed, "I'm a lady."

"So's the ticket taker," he explained, with a laugh, and introduced me to an elderly woman with a nice motherly manner.

But it took me a long time to recover from the shock.

THE FOILED DEADHEAD.
By Dixie Costello.

IN a town I visited there was a chronic dead beat who had the local reputation of being the greatest professional pass worker on record. He always told a yarn about being a former actor, and ended by asking for professional courtesies.

"I would be glad to oblige you," said a manager who had been warned, "but I haven't a card with me. But I tell you what I'll do. I will write the pass where it will be easily seen."

Then he wrote "Pass the bearer" on the fellow's white shirt front and signed his name. The dead beat hastened to the gate, where the ticket taker gravely examined the writing. He passed him in and then called him back and said in a loud voice:

"Hold on, my friend, I forgot. It will be necessary for you to leave that pass with me."

A PAT ANSWER.
By Cecelia Renard.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON was sensitive upon the subject of his retirement from the stage. In one city in the South a newspaper came out with a long article that he had finally decided to leave the footlights forever. The reporter was asked how he got the story.

"The city editor told me to see Joseph Jefferson, and ask him if he was going to retire."

"Well, did you see him?"

"No, I sent up my card to his room, and it was sent back with this written on it:

"'Mr. Jefferson HAS retired.'

"So I had his own authority for the story!"

A HORRIBLE MISTAKE.

AT an evening party the guests were asked to take part in a game in which everybody was to make a face, the one who made the worst face to win the prize. It seemed as if all did their worst. Then the judge went up to one woman who was sitting off in one corner.

"Madame," said he, "I think you have won the prize. Allow me to"——

"Excuse me," she said haughtily, "I wasn't playing!"

NOT MUCH, WHEN YOU COME TO THINK OF IT.

A NORTHERNER riding through the West Virginian mountains came up with a mountaineer leisurely driving a herd of pigs.

"Where are you driving the pigs to?" asked the rider.

"Out to pasture 'em a bit."

"What for?"

"To fatten 'em."

"Isn't it pretty slow work to fatten them on grass? Up where I come from we pen them up and feed them on corn. It saves a lot of time."

"Yaas, I s'pose so," drawled the mountaineer. "But what's time to a hawg?"

SORRY HE CAME OVER.

Name?—Abraham Cherkowsky.

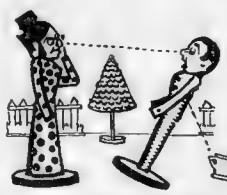
Born?—Russia.

Business?—Rotten.

FIRST CALL FOR BREAKFAST.

ON a Pullman sleeper at 7 o'clock in the morning, when the passengers were about ready to leave their berths, a baby in the state-room began to cry lustily. Just at that moment the porter opened the door and sang out:

"First call for breakfast."



SORRY HE SPOKE.

HE was an American visitor, and as he sauntered into the barber's shop he freely criticised British methods of work and business.

"You don't specialize," he said. "You should stick to one branch of a thing and master it completely."

The barber said nothing, but lathered his face very liberally and then sat down to read.

"Well, why don't you shave me?" inquired the American after five minutes.

"We only lather here," was the response; "you must go into the next street for a shave."

A BUSY FIREMAN.

IN an Illinois town that you can't find on the map, the fire department has an unexcelled record for conscientiousness and devotion to duty. One night the church bell clanged out an alarm with the code taps that indicated "fire north of square."

In instant response the fire department jumped on his horse and galloped to the rescue. He had not gone far when a second alarm announced a second fire, this time to the south. An anxious citizen speeding toward his south-side property called out to the passing marshal:

"Hi, Jake! you're headed the wrong way! There's a big blaze to Greening's."

The fireman was no shirk. "Keep it a-goin', Ed!" he shouted. "I'll be over in less 'en ten minutes!"

ONE WAY OF JUDGING LINKS.

MARK TWAIN was walking over a golf course watching a friend's strokes. His friend was rather a duffer. Teeing off, he sent clouds of earth flying in all directions. Then, to hide his confusion, he said to his guest: "What do you think of our links here, Mr. Clemens?"

"Best I ever tasted," said Mark Twain, as he wiped the dirt from his lips with his handkerchief.

AND SHE DIDN'T EVEN SEE THEM.

"AND did you really go to Rome?" asked a guest.

"I really don't know, my dear," replied the hostess, just returned from her first trip abroad. "My husband always bought the tickets."

MIGHT LOOK INVITING IF DECOLLETTE.

THE new girl had been but three weeks in the employ of an artistic family, but her time had evidently not been spent exclusively in studying the domestic arts. As her mistress was giving her instructions as to the dinner she said:

"Marie, don't forget the potatoes."

"No, ma'am," was the reply; "will you have 'em in their jackets or in the nood?"

"BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM."

AUGUSTUS THOMAS, the playright, told in a recent speech of a hunting trip he had taken in the South. They were after 'coons and 'possums, but the only trail the dogs struck was one which made them put their tails between their legs and turn for home.

"Just what does a polecat look like?" Mr. Thomas asked one of his negro guides.

"A polecat, boss? Why, a polecat's somefin' like a kitten, only prettier. Yes, a polecat's a heap prettier'n a kiten, ain't it, Sam?" he said, turning to another negro for corroboration.

Sam did not seem so sure. He hesitated.

"Well," he replied, scratching his wool, "it's always been mah contention dat handsome is as handsome does."

A SUPERIOR ANCESTOR.

A WESTERN buyer is inordinately proud of the fact that one of his ancestors affixed his name to the Declaration of Independence. At the time the salesman called, the buyer was signing a number of checks and affixed his signature with many a curve and flourish. The salesman's patience becoming exhausted in waiting for the buyer to recognize him, he finally observed:

"You have a fine signature, Mr. So-and-So."

"Yes," admitted the buyer, "I should have. One of my forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence."

"So," said the caller, with rising inflection And then he added:

"Well, you ain't got nottings on me. One of my forefathers signed the Ten Commandments."

IT'S A HABIT SOME STARS AND STATUES HAVE.

"HAS anything ever been discovered on Venus?" asked the student of astronomy.

"No," replied the old professor, whose mind had slipped a cog and transported him into mythological fields, "not if the pictures of her are authentic."

TIME IS MONEY.

TWO Irishmen were in a city bank waiting their turn at the cashier's window.

"This reminds me of Finnegan," remarked one.

"What about Finnegan?" asked the other.

"'Tis a story that Finnegan died, and when he greeted St. Peter he said: 'It's a fine job you've had here for a long time.'

"'Well, Finnegan,' said Saint Peter, 'here we count a million years as a minute and a million dollars as a cent!'

"'Ah!' said Finnegan, 'I'm needing cash. Lend me a cent.'

"'Sure,' says Peter; 'just wait a minute.'"

Some Bright Flashes from the Diamond

By ARLIE LATHAM
of the New York "Giants."

ONE day the St. Louis Club was in Cleveland. It was during the days of Oliver Tebeau as third baseman for the home team. Tebeau was a native of St. Louis, and a very popular fellow with the fans in his own city, as well as a great hit with the Cleveland bunch. He was the best third baseman they had ever had, and they appreciated him. I had a warm spot in my heart for Tebeau, and I wanted to catch on with the fans there. I was coming as a stranger, except by reputation. After the bell had rung for the game to start and the umpire had announced the pitchers for the day, I faced the crowd in the grandstands, lifted my hands for silence, and to poor Chris's surprise I began:

"Hear ye, hear ye, ladies and gentlemen! This afternoon third base will be played by Mr. Oliver Tebeau, a native Dutchman of St. Louis, from the Kerry Patch, and also by Mr. Arlie Latham, a native Irishman from Bingen on the Rhine. While Mr. Tebeau is at bat the band will play 'The Watch on the Rhine.' While Mr. Latham is at bat it will play 'The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls.'

I didn't dare look in the direction of the honorable Chris all the rest of the game, but when I got to the dressing room there he was waiting for me.

"Hey, Lathams, vot you meant dis afternoons mit some more of your jockess foolishness? Dere vasn't any pand present, und vy didt you dry to disappoint a crowdt like dot. Uudt, also, Lathams, you know very vell, chust as vell as me, dot dere ain'd no Dutchman on Kerry Patch at home. How vill fifty tollars suid you for dot liddle bid of monkey pizness?"

I WAS probably the first professional athlete to go on the stage Before the advent of Jim Corbett or Kid McCoy a piece was written for me called "Fashions." I was the star, but, believe me, it was little more than a thinking part they had laid out for me. I might almost as well have represented a tree. The night I opened I was waiting all a-tremble in the wings, when six stage hands raced up to me and yelled in a chorus in my ear: "For heaven's sake, Mr. Latham, go, go, go. There's your cue. Go on"

"Cue, cue; what's a cue? What cue?" I asked in much surprise Finally the light broke through, and I remembered that I was an actor, and the men on the stage, who happened to be a Weber and Fields pair, had given the tip for my entrance. I made it and became dumb on the instant. The German comedians waited in perspiring anxiety for me to pick up my lines. I couldn't have picked up a thousand dollar note just at that moment. In desperation, I bumped against one of the fat Germans and said·

"Lend me $20 to save my life."

The German person was completely unhorsed. But in a moment he got light, too.

"Lend you $20 to safe your life, yes? Ach Gott, vot a mans!"

Then he reached down in his baggy trousers and hauled out a handful of $1,000 notes in stage money. He counted it over in a slow manner, all the time trying to get me steered onto my lines. But I couldn't be steered. Finally he said·

"Twendy tollars to safe your life? Nein. Dot's too much. Go und drown yourself"

Everybody thought the lines belonged in the piece, and it made such a hit that they were made part of the dialogue after that.

By CHRISTY MATHEWSON,
Star Pitcher of the "Giants."

WE had a game between the Yannigans and the Regulars down at our training camp in Texas last Spring, and it ended in favor of the Yannigans by a score of 1½ to 1. Yes, the Yannigans defeated McGraw's first bunch by a half run.

Al Bridwell, who was playing shortstop for the Yannigans, hit a hot grasser down the third-base line in the ninth inning and the ball broke in two. Devlin ran in and grabbed up one half and threw to first, but the man on third came home

The umpire ruled that half a run counted and that Bridwell was only half out.

* * *

I HAVE often been asked what I considered the most sensational play ever made. Well, I believe the honor goes to the American League

It was in a game between the White Sox and Tigers, and it was the first defeat Detroit had suffered in thirteen games. Ed Walsh was twirling for the Chicago team, and the Tigers regarded him as their lawful prey. The game was played in Detroit, and Mullin, who started the season with eleven straight victories for Detroit, was slated to work against Walsh.

Early in the game George Davis, the veteran shortstop of the White Sox, secured the only hit off Mullin. The ball, driven down the first-base line into right field, struck a fire hose lying in the grass and bounded into the bleachers for a home run After that Mullin was invincible.

Toward the end of the game Detroit opened with the usual rally. Rossman, Detroit's first baseman, leading off in the inning, smashed the ball against the fence for a triple. Dutch Schnefer drew a base on balls. Schmidt, next at bat, gave the hit-and-run sign and, with both runners in motion, hit a hard bounder down toward third base, where Tannehill, of Chicago, was playing Tanney made a perfect scoop and threw the ball to the plate twenty feet ahead of Rossman, who, seeing that he was caught, doubled back on the line, hoping to dodge the tag long enough to allow Schaefer to reach third.

Catcher Sullivan raced down the line with the ball, driving Rossman before him Rossman slipped and fell close to third base, and just as Sullivan tagged him for the first out Schefer slid to third In the meantime, Schmidt, a slow runner, had turned first and was well on his way to second. Sullivan straightened up and shot the ball to Rohe, who was covering second base and called for the throw

As Schmidt slid, Rohe's arm came down with a thump and Schmidt made the second out. The instant Sullivan heave the ball Schefer was on his feet and dashing for home from third. The plate had been left unprotected; Sullivan was down near third base. Walsh, the pitcher, yelled for the ball and raced Schnefer to the rubber, closely followed by George Davis The two runners collided in front of the plate

Walsh was stunned and Schaefer was thrown ten feet from the plate alighting on his shoulders Davis, who arrived about the same time, took the throw and dropped the ball on the struggling Tiger, completing the third out and the most sensational triple play I believe was ever made in the big leagues.

By BARNEY DREYFUSS,
Owner of Pittsburg Pirates.

PAT TEBEAU tried to terrorize King Gaffney, the peer of all umpires, one day in Cleveland, but only on that occasion Cleveland and Baltimore were fighting for the pennant and they met this day Just before the game Tebeau sought out Gaffney, and, pointing to the field crowd, held back by the ropes, remarked

"See that crowd, Gaff?"

"I do What of it?" asked the umpire

"Well, they are pretty sore on you, and so am I believe me, the first poor decision you hand our team I'm going to let down the ropes and that gang will kill you Look out, now"

Gaffney said not a word In the second inning Joe Kelley came up to bat Before off a long hit down the first-base line easily eight feet foul.

"Fair ball!" cried Gaffney, "run, Kel, run!"

And as Kelley tore around the bases Gaffney wheeled around to Tebeau and roared·

"Now cut the ropes, you big bluffer. Go ahead and do it."

But Tebeau didn't do it.

By HAL CHASE
Manager of the New York "Highlanders."

BOBBY LOWE, the old Boston second baseman, made a home run once by hitting the ball so hard that the hit went from Boston to New York

It was on the South End grounds in the Hub, where the New York, New Haven & Hartford trains pass right back of the left field fence. It was a close game, and it was up to Lowe in the ninth inning to get a home run if Boston was to win.

Bobby caught the ball squarely and it sailed over the fence just as the five o'clock express to New York was passing The ball crashed through a car window and was carried all the way to New York.

Baltimore was Boston's opponent that day, and Johnny McGraw, now manager of the Giants, who had been suspended for three days, was on his way home. He was in the car when the ball came crashing through the window. When he got to New York he bought a paper and discovered that Lowe had made the hit. He immediately wired to Boston:

DID you ever hear of a pitcher getting an assist on his own delivery when fanning a man? Well, it happened a week ago, when the Yankees were playing Washington, but none of the scribes seemed to notice it Milan was at bat for Washington, and Jack Quinn shot a fast one over for the third strike Milan missed it completely, and so did Mitchell, who was catching. The ball struck his chest protector with a thud and bounded way out to Quinn, who picked it up and tossed it to Chase I believe that to be the only time a pitcher ever got an assist when striking out his man.

Spring Fashion Hints

Checks, particularly the certified style, will be much in demand at the swellest tailoring establishments.

The most popular thing in shoes the coming Summer will be feet.

The ties most affected during the month of June will be the matrimonial variety. Reno papers please copy.

The most fetching things in trousers this Summer will be the waiters at the Summer resorts. The larger the tip the quicker the fetch.

Silk shirts will be no longer fashionable than if they are unfashionable. The shirtmaker must make a profit, somehow.

The proper glove for Saturday afternoons can be had at all the leading sporting goods emporiums. They are quite catching.

Well-bred men now wear the same size hat the "morning after" that they did the "night before," even if it does seem to pinch a little.

The well-groomed man acquires by constant practise the habit of always holding his hands so that his diamond ring will attract the greatest possible amount of attention. Excellent examples of the stunning effects of this easily-acquired habit are to be seen around Times Square any old time.

A blush, or at least a shy, retiring look goes well with pajamas of any color when a fire or other emergency makes it necessary to wear them in public. The same rule holds true with the unromantic but no less serviceable night shirt.

The custom of wearing pantaloons on the lower extremities continues general among men who dress in good taste. The only change from last season is that the garment is worn with a slightly sharper crease when called "trousers" than when called "pants."

ACT I.—DELICATESSEN STORE OF OLE, THE FISH-PICKLER

Dottie, wearing a white muslin dress, cut low in the neck, is dusting the Bismarck herring with a chocolate eclair. Her expression indicates that it is Thursday afternoon and that she had been to a moving picture show one evening the month before. Ole is busily employed oiling the sardines. He raises his hand with a gesture which indicates that he wishes a rich uncle in Norway would die and leave him a thousand pfennigs.

DOTTIE (stamping her foot. Darn these old herrings, anyway.

OLE—You should not make me yump, and you should not speak such of the herrings, which are almost new yet. [Enter Jim Joggles.]

J. J.—Gimme three cents worth of dill pickles, sweetness.

DOTTIE—That's the fifteenth pickle you eat to-day.

J. J.—They tastes like ice cream when you sells them

DOTTIE—Quit yer kiddin'

OLE—Dottie, never mind such foolish. Get the bell-punch what that street car conductor gave you and make them holes in the Swiss cheese already. [Exit Jim Joggles, with look on his face which tells the trained observer that the honest A. D. T. boy is suffering great pain in the centre of the pickle bell.]

DOTTIE—Gee, I wish I had a other job. [Enter W. Burlington Crash.]

W. B. C.—Be mine, dearest, and all you need do is boil the eggs for my breakfast.

DOTTIE—I am gazing at your map with silent contempt. There's too much bazoonte of soda in you for a honest delicatessen goil. Go, before I say a word to you.

W. B. C.—I will gain you yet, coise you, if not by fair means then by stickem. In the meantime to fire some of them rolls at the ribbon counter. [Exit.]

DOTTIE—What chanst has a honest goil? Answer, nix. I'm tired of acting as governess to a bunch of dill pickles. Gee, here comes a loidy in her ottermobeel! And look at the dimonds. [Enter Mrs. Astorvan.]

MRS. ASTORVAN—I am giving a dinner to-night to the British Ambassador and I want four pounds of sliced ham

DOTTIE [in aiced tones]—Four pounds.

MRS. A.—And fifteen cents worth of potato salad

DOTTIE [weakly]—The best?

MRS. A.—Certainly—the very best. It's to be a real swell dinner, no one but tony folks there. And have you——

DOTTIE—Oh! You dropped one of your dimond rings into the pickled herring barrel.

OLE—Yumping Yiminy, such a chump she is That ring would have paid the rent for me.

MRS. A.—Thank you, mee good gurl. And have you any genuine imported wienerwurst?

OLE [in hoarse whisper]—Say it iss, say it iss.

DOTTIE—I am only a delicatessener, but I has a honest heart. We has only domestic wiener. [Ole falls fainting upon the cash register, which rings up $2.75.]

MRS. A. [walking out of store]—Home, James

DOTTIE—Honesty is a tough policy

ACT II.—SCENE: THE SAME.

Dottie is running over the counter, covering sheets of wrapping paper with figures.

OLE—The cash is $2.75 short, no matter how much figuring I makes. I lose more money than I takes in. Rulantion needs me quick if I does such every day. [Dottie appears outside window, gazing hungrily within. She places large cut of Chinko Chalo in front of her, obscuring her view of the smoked salmon.] Ha, that girl what practically is mine of a diamond ring and also a safe [illegible] diamonds after I fire her, eh! [Enter Jim Joggles.]

J. J.—Gimme three cents worth of dill pickles.

OLE.—How can I sell you three cents worth yet when dill pickle is for a nickel already? It is beyond me to estimate the. [Enter W. Burlington Crash, who stands behind him.]

J. J.—I match you whether you gimme three or four Are you on?

OLE—I love one gambling clinnee.

W. B. C.—Ah, ha! A gambling house. I will tip off Commissioner Shinn and let Dottie, the Dainty Delicatessener see my power [Exit W. B. C., who almost knocks over Mrs. Astorvan as she enters. Ole and Jim Joggles are watching coins for the pickles, but as neither will take the risk of showing up before the other, the game does not progress.]

MRS. A.—These lower classes is getting quite gauche. How different in England. And how inquiring to see the royal arms of special warrant over a fried fish shop. It gives a real dastingue air to fried flounder even. [Loud crashes are heard above the ceiling. An axe-head comes through and a heavy crowbar drops upon a platter of pigs' feet. Two large feet and part of a plain clothes man appear through hole in ceiling.]

OLE [looking up]—Hi, hi, what the matter is? You have broken one of my pigs' feet. What it is?

WM. J. SHINN [from above]—We are trying to get in your store

OLE—Well, the door open is.

WM. J. S.—I know, but this is a raid. You are gambling. You have a crooked pretzel in your store. [Enter W. Burlington Crash.]

W. B. C.—Ha, ha, I'll scare that girl into marrying me [Dottie sneaks into the store without being seen in the confusion, soaks the pretzels in water and straightens them out while concealed behind the herring barrel.]

MRS. A.—Oh, I am so frightened. [Enter J. Pierpoint Jorgan.]

J. P. J [to Mrs. A.]—Allee, it is thee?

MRS. A—Pierp! Protect me and I will be thine.

J. P. J.—I came to get a report on pickles and I get a wife.

OLE—Tough luck, Mr. Jorgan, you gets it for once [Wm. J. Shinn drops through into store and rushes to inspect pretzels.]

WM. J. S.—They are all straight. Foiled. But who is this? [Puts handcuffs on W. Burlington Crash.] The great department store thief nailed at last. And who is this behind the barrel"

DOTTIE [rising up]—Muh

OLE—Yah!

J. J.—Dottie!''

MRS. A.—The dainty, but honest, delicatessener. [Dottie and J. J. embrace.] The Ambassador didn't come to my dinner and you saved me all that needless expense. If you and your friend would like to start a little farm in the country, I will present you with a bee.

OLE—And I will buy off of you all the honey which it is making

J. P. J.—And I will quote you a wholesale rate on our dill pickles, [illegible] as a breakfast, dinner or supper food, or for eating purposes.

DOTTIE [kissing the Bismarck herring on the lips]—Good-by, old friends. I can never forget the happy days spent with you by Dottie, the Dainty Delicatessener.

The Adventures of Harold Hangover

By William F. Kirk.

This Phenomenal, Albeit Sentimental, Ball Player Meets the Witch of Washington Heights.

(Copyright, 1911, by American Press Association, Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

HAROLD HANGOVER, whose fame as a baseball player a few years ago, burst through the narrow confines of Oshkosh, his native heath, and spread to the uttermost parts of the earth, has come to New York and signed with the Giants.

When Harold reaches New York Bugs Raymond meets him at the station and tells him that he has been appointed his keeper. On the way to their lodgings Harold catches sight of a winsome witch at an elevated station, and he cannot forget her.

CHAPTER VI

WHEN Harold Hangover heard the pleading voice of Raymond, asking for the three hundred dollars in gold he had brought from Oshkosh, he was on the verge of disclosing the secret of its whereabouts. Then something like a strain a sixth sense seemed to whisper "Nix," and he sank back into unconsciousness.

Then it was that Harold Hangover, hardened swashbuckler though he was, dreamed the dream that was destined to change his whole life.

He dreamed that he had escaped from Raymond, his keeper. He dreamed that he was dwelling in a palatial apartment on Washington Heights, where song birds and goldfish flitted about the court, and where the colored hallboys refused to be called "Son" or "Lad."

He dreamed, then, that across the court he heard a voice singing some crooning lullaby. Something in the silvery quality of the singer's tones made him look and there, in his dream, Harold Hangover saw his soubrette, the beautiful little blonde against whom he had inadvertently leaned after leaving the Polo Grounds the day before.

"It is her!" exclaimed Harold, and then hastily corrected himself. "Yes, it is she, the idol of my heart, the ideal of my dreams. I have found her, or, as the old Romans used to say, 'Eurrek-her.'"

How long Harold slept he never knew. When he awoke Raymond was still leaning solicitously over him.

"How do you feel now, pal?" inquired the erratic spitball artist. "I trust that you have quite regained your former buoyancy of spirit, and that from now on your progress to complete recovery will be assured beyond all peradventure."

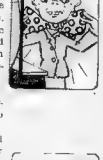
Harold raised himself on one elbow.

"Strange," he muttered dreamily, looking uncertainly at his roommate. "I never heard you talk so well before, Raymond."

"I can throw the swell chatter when I want to, all right, all right," said the proud Bugs. "And then they say I am mad. Ha! Ha! I am not mad. I am not mad!"

"Stop raving," said Harold Hangover, "and listen to me for a moment. Say, do you remember that little doll that we saw on the 'L' platform yesterday? Of course, you do—the little girl with the slipper on each foot—the one that I leaned against by mistake."

"I didn't give her no notice," said Bugs gruffly. "Them brothers ain't no good. If you're going to get spliced, get a nice big German girl. I gotta friend out in Chi that married one of 'em, and she can do more work than a horse. And cook! O la la!"



Harold Hangover regarded Raymond with a stare of mingled surprise and sorrow. In the short time he had known the spitball artist he had come to like him immensely, though not quite enough to make up his mind about turning over the three hundred dollars. And now, just as he was sure that he had found a kindred spirit with whom to associate, he had discovered that Raymond and Romance were as apart as the two poles. He shuddered.

"I was going to tell you something," he said. "But now I guess I will keep it to myself. If you will help me into my clothes, I think I shall take a ride uptown."

Raymond obeyed meekly, handing Harold his trousers upside down and inadvertently turning the pockets of the great Oshkosh twirler's coat and vest.

"About that three hundred," he ventured as Harold was brushing his teeth and his derby hat, "about that little bag of gold you were going to let me take care of—"

"That can wait till I get back," said Harold Hangover. "Will I look all right in this red tie?"

"I think it looks fine on you. May I not accompany you wherever you are going?"

"You may not," said our hero shortly. "I shall return anonymous."

Harold found his way to the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street subway station, rode down to Ninety-sixth street and took a Broadway express to One Hundred and Forty-fifth. Guided unerringly by the recollection of his strange dream, he entered a beautiful apartment house near the Hudson and made straight for a suite on the third floor.

"What do you want, Jack?" asked a young man in the doorway. His tone was insolent to a degree.

"I don't know exactly how to put it," said Harold Hangover, coloring to the roots of his ears. "The fact of the matter is, I am looking for a dear young lady, and I don't know her name."

"Say, Jack!" said the young stranger, "have you been trailing my sister?"

"No, I haven't!" snapped Harold, "and stop calling me Jack. My name is Harold."

"Oh, trailing arbutus!" mocked the man in the doorway

And then, just as Harold Hangover was about to depart in despair, SHE came to the door.

"What is it all about, dear?" she queried.

The morning sun was streaming through the large French windows, touching her hair with a golden glory. One stray curl fluttered loose and tickled her nose. She sneezed, but even when she sneezed Harold Hangover thought that he had never seen anything half so beautiful. She recognized him, and a warm flush mantled her lovely brow.

"My hero, my brave hero!" she said. "Oh, brother, this is Mr. Harold Hangover, the famous Oshkosh pitcher, who joined the team yesterday. Oh, you should have seen that sneeze ball of his working yesterday, and that divine home run. Oh, it was heavenly! It was magnificent!"

Praise was not new to Harold Hangover. Seasoned athlete that he was, he had heard encomiums in wholesale lots since the day he first broke into fast company with his little bag of snuff and his sneeze ball. He had been lauded to the skies from Seattle to Portland, Me. But now he stood, hat in hand, blushing like a plainclothes man who has been caught refusing money.

"You are too kind," he managed to say at last. "This is great weather we are having, isn't it?"

"Pray come in," smiled the fair young girl

Through the pleasant chat that followed between Harold and his fair hostess (the brother had discreetly left the room) Harold sat like one in a trance, coming to himself only long enough to make a comment now and then about the weather. It seemed too good to be true, he reflected. This glorious creature a lady rooter, and crazy about him! What luck!

Suddenly our hero rose from his chair and said impulsively:

"Little one, will you be my wife? We can get married to-day, this very hour!"

"Yes," she said, softly, shyly But not to-day, dear heart"

Harold Hangover folded her in his arms and bade her a tender adieu. The parting would be brief, he promised her, and on the morrow he would return with the engagement ring. And so he left her.

"Where yuh been?" asked Keeper Raymond when our hero had returned to the hotel, flushed and happy.

"She is mine! She is mine! Hero, Buggsy, old boy, you know more about engagement rings than I do. Take this money"—

Harold Hangover faltered, searched his every pocket madly and turned deathly white

HIS THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS IN GOLD WAS GONE!

With a low groan of agony, Raymond swooned.

Next day the young man dashed into the doctor's office long before the office hours, much to the surprise of the medico. He demanded that the maid call the doctor at once.

When the youth saw him he exclaimed, excitedly:

"Say, Doc, what in the dickens did you mean by giving me that pill yesterday? It was nothing but alum."

"Young man, you are cured! You tasted it all right. You remembered what it was, and you told the truth. Fifty dollars, please."

STRONG LINES FROM "THE DOMINANT SEX"

A NEW PLAY BY ANNIE NATHAN MEYER.

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Examiner, Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THERE will always be a dominant sex; it is for the men to say which one.

* * *

THERE isn't a woman now, for all her shouting, who has an idea of equality—least she wants is privilege.

* * *

GRANTED that women have followed false gods But men were once her gods and they deserted her. In their place other images have been set up.

* * *

MEN have got to stop putting all their strength and energy and their masterfulness into conquering other men—they have got to reconquer women

* * *

WE MEN have ceased to dominate women because we are absorbed in dominating other men. In every country where the old regime is dying out and commercialism reigns, there we find this restlessness of women.

* * *

IF women want to go out into the world and take our salaries, then they have got to take the bad with the good. If they keep on looking for equality, some day they will wake up good and hard and find they've got it.

* * *

SOMETIMES I think you clubwomen are unwilling to admit there is such a thing as father-love. It is always mother-love with you, as if fathers did not make sacrifices for their children. You never think of a father penned up behind a desk in a stuffy warehouse or office while the mother gabs about the stores and theatres dressed in lingeries, paid for by her underfed children.

* * *

YOU women are always saying that you are needed to purify politics—have you purified anything you got into? Look at the personalities, the sensationalism you complain of in the newspapers. Who is it done for? The women. Who read it? The women. You complain of the vulgarity of the stage. Who buys the tickets and selects the shows to take their husbands to? The women.

* * *

IF you men remained the masters, do you think we would be looking to women to fill our lives? We women should be mastered, we want to be mastered—we adore our masters. It is when you let the reins slip through your fingers that we seized them. Where we women used to look to you men for praise, for flattery, we now look to women. Where we used to think life empty without some man looming large, we now fill it with great gatherings of women, with the game of politics, with club life and public movements. We women have tasted a new flavor—that of moving others, not, as of old, by physical charm alone, by dress or other allurements, but by power, by magnetism, the thrill of intellect. It may be that never again will women go to men for their biggest emotions.

So wonder that there are so many wi[ves] known to train

Anybody who [has] ever had [to] eat on a train should not be unduly flustered if her husband [is] bound to be a wreck

Between fresh waiters and stale orders [and] to get home after a trip

And the prices!

It is the worst kind of train robbery we [know]

And you've got to stand for it

They know they've got you You can't get independent when the train is going 60 miles an hour (and your bank roll a hundred and eighty) and say: "That can't cost much Let's go to some other place." There is no other place And they know it. They have a monopoly The only competition they allow is the low [fare] coming through the train with [those] plastered ham sandwiches — a smell of ham [hounded] by two thirsts

When you ask the waiter what he has good to eat he will first look a hunted, and then he will probably suggest a "club steak." They're a hard old club and they're like [it] In fact when the waiters get in a fight with the chef, that's what they use them for. They don't taste like steaks—they taste like stakes. And they call it a PORTERHOUSE." Why if the porter ever saw anything like that in his house he'd take out his brush and blacking and start to shine it Porters aren't the brightest fellows in the world, but they know leather when they see it

And did you ever notice that as soon as everybody has finished dinner they immediately cut off the dinner?

Can you blame them

If you had taken all that money from a train load of people for that kind of food wouldn't you get away as quickly as possible? If the dining car crew was still there when the effects of their deadly food were beginning to show, not one would escape with their life. Besides, the dining car crew has to cut off that dinner so that they can get off and go some place for something to eat

The only way to dine wisely on a train is to go into the diner, order a dinner and when the waiter brings it, pay the check, tip the waiter and throw the dinner out of the window.

PRESIDENT SEELYE TALKED FOR MAYOR

Former Head of Smith College at Northampton Is Not Used He is Called On.

BELIEVES IN CIVIC DUTY.

After Long College Service Dr. Seelye is Now Engrossed With His Garden Work.

NORTHAMPTON, May 13.—One of the hardest propositions to do[wn] that has been presented to [the] Democratic City Committee for [the] municipal campaign was known on behalf of [the] organization for Mayor when [the] committee met last night to pass [upon] candidates and opinions on another [matter].

For the reason that Dr. Seelye has been the most prominent man at Smith College. He was given a willing ear to all who called at the president's office, and many were those who could have found [no] friendship or enough for that matter but it was an intricate problem in the end was to select simply a man known as well as Dr. Seelye better for the reason that the gardener, for gardening is something that [he] [does] [not] quite [like].

Not only that, but when he would have the best place to look for him is in his garden, where he was not to be found giving his gardener pointers and using the hoe himself. But it would be easy to the gardener himself that he would admit that he knew considerable about the subject.

Waits Until He Is Asked.

[An] interrogation [point] was [put] at [the] meeting this afternoon and asked:

Dr. Seelye will you be willing to allow your name to be before the Republican [party] as the full as a candidate for Mayor

[Dr.] Seelye, [who] has been [one] of the [most] [prominent] [men] [in] [the] [city] [for] [the] [past] [quarter] [of] [a] [century] [has] [been] [approached] [on] [a] [number] [of] [occasions] [to] [run] [for] [Mayor] [but] [has] [always] [refused]

But [this] [time] [he] [was] [not] [asked] [to] [run] [as] [a] [candidate] [for] [Mayor]

Just [what] [the] [reply] [would] [have] [been] [had] [he] [been] [asked] [is] [not] [known] [but] [it] [is] [safe] [to] [say] [that] [it] [would] [have] [been] [in] [the] [negative]

But [it] [was] [not] [to] [be] [and] [the] [committee] [had] [to] [look] [elsewhere] [for] [a] [candidate] [for] [Mayor]

Just [as] [soon] [as] [the] [committee] [was] [afraid] [that] [Dr.] [Seelye] [would] [be] [forced] [into] [the] [race] [and] [would] [not] [consent]

And while [the] [committee] [was] [considering] [municipal] [affairs] [it] [was] [considered] [necessary] [to] [have] [a] [conference] [with] [the] [head] [of] [the] [city] [government] [to] [learn] [that] [feeling] [was] [the] [least] [strong] [against] [Dr.] [Seelye] [dislikes] [to] [have] [opinions] [on] [another] [man's] [job]. He admitted as much when he said

Would Do His Duty.

"There are better men for the office of mayor in Northampton for they have been in close touch with the industrial life of the city more than I have. Northampton has grown in industrial and commercial importance [in] the [last] [few] [years] [and] [it] [has] [become] [important] [in] the [manufacturing] [line]. The [last] [few] [years] [have] [been] [the] [most] [important] [in] [the] [history] [of] [the] [city] [and] [I] [have] [not] [kept] [in] [touch] [with] [the] [industrial] [life] [of] [the] [city] [as] [I] [should] [have] [done] [if] [I] [were] [to] [become] [its] [chief] [executive] [officer] [and] [I] [feel] [that] [there] [are] [men] [who] [are] [better] [fitted] [for] [the] [position] [than] [I] [am] [and] [I] [have] [not] [changed] [my] [opinion] [in] [the] [least] [since] [I] [have] [been] [asked] [to] [run] [for] [Mayor]

Let the City Rule Itself.

"The good [people] [of] [the] [city] [who] [would] [advocate] [that] [I] [be] [nominated] [as] [the] [Republican] [candidate] [for] [Mayor] [are] [incorporated] [in] [our] [present] [form] [of] [government] [but] [I] [believe] [that] [the] [city] [should] [rule] [itself] [and] [that] [it] [should] [be] [run] [on] [business] [principles] [and] [not] [on] [political] [ones]

"If I had been asked to run for Mayor I would have refused. I have other duties to perform and I feel that I could not do justice to the office of Mayor and to the duties that I have to perform. I have always been a Republican and I have always voted the Republican ticket and I have always been interested in the welfare of the party but I have never taken an active part in politics and I have never been a candidate for any office."

THOUSANDS TO HONOR FATHER O'CALLAGHAN

Trade Unions and Parishioners Will Celebrate Anniversary of Priesthood.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S PASTOR.

John Mitchell Will Speak and Mayor Fitzgerald Will Preside at Meeting To-Night.

MONSIGNOR DENIS O'CALLAGHAN, pastor of St. Augustine's Church at South Boston, rounded out the forty-sixth year of his priesthood on June 6 of this year. This fact is being taken advantage of by his thousands of friends and admirers to pay for some mark of their appreciation of his accomplishments for the people of that section of the city.

Prominent among that number are the trade unionists of Boston, who will hold a mass meeting at St. Augustine Hall, E street, tonight. His parishioners, and former parishioners also, are to hold a reception in the same hall on May [illegible] for the labor men, John Mitchell, [illegible] Mine Workers' Union will [illegible] Thursday night.

It is the first time in the history of [illegible] commonwealth of Massachusetts that [illegible] organists have chosen the pastor of [illegible] for such an honor. The [illegible] Monsignor O'Callaghan is even more [illegible] because of the fact that [illegible] and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, [illegible] in the labor movement, all join [illegible] his praise.

To Have Distinguished Guests.

[illegible] hundred of Boston's most prominent public, professional, business and labor men have been invited to sit on the platform in St. Augustine Hall this evening. The invitations are signed by Edward Broders, president, and Henry Abrahams, secretary of Cigarmakers' Union No. 97, and read as follows.

"Invited guests meet at the F street hall at 7:30."

John Mitchell, the veteran labor leader, in his acceptance of the invitation to speak at this meeting, addressed to Mr. Abrahams and dated from Mount Vernon, N. Y., states:

"I write to say that I could speak at South Boston, and assist in paying labor's tribute to Monsignor O'Callaghan, on the evening of Sunday, May 14. I shall make my plans to be there at that time, and if you think best shall deliver, in part, the address recently made before the Boston City Club."

Lauded by Committee Chairman.

Henry Abrahams, secretary of the Cigarmakers' Union and one of the committee in charge of the meeting to-night in an interview given the Sunday AMERICAN said

"The members of our union, many of whom are communicants in Father O'Callaghan's church, watched with intense interest his unceasing efforts to better conditions for the working people of South Boston.

"His zeal for the welfare of those who [illegible] has been commented on in union circles as without number. But it never reached in any concrete movement to show appreciation of his labor until Thomas B. [illegible], a member of our union label committee, called attention to the coming anniversary planned for by Father O'Callaghan's parish.

"Edward Broders, president of our union, immediately suggested that we endeavor to secure John Mitchell to deliver an address in St. Augustine Hall, and that we hold a meeting which would in a slight measure show the high esteem in which "the first citizen of South Boston" is held by union men in the city over.

"Brothers Bradley and Broders have done the greater part of the detail work in a public way from the holding of such a meeting. But the enthusiastic support given them by union men in general is proof positive that our proposed tribute to Father O'Callaghan meets with the unqualified approval of organized labor throughout the entire State."

Parishioners' Meeting.

Mr. Abrahams stated that the list of invited guests included the most prominent public officials of the city and the State, and that the officers of the Massachusetts State Branch of the American Federation of Labor, the officers of the Boston Central Labor Union, and the officers of all the International unions having headquarters in this State.

Fully 7,000 of Father O'Callaghan's parishioners and former parishioners are expected to take part in the reception of May 22-23. There being $14,000 of a debt on the St. Augustine school and convent, the priest and his people have taken this method to clear off that debt before the Inter event occurs.

The Rev. Denis O'Callaghan was born in Cork county Cork, Ireland, but parents coming to the United States when he was only a few years old. He was seventy-two years old March 18, and his jubilee of [illegible] was passed in Salem. He was educated at St. Charles College, Ellicott City, Md., and ordained at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, in the year 1865. While at St. Charles College he was a classmate of Cardinal Gibbons.

Erected St. Augustine's.

It was a curate at St. Peter and St. Paul's Church on Broadway from 1865 to 1880, since which time he has been pastor of St. Augustine's Church, on Dorchester street South Boston, an edifice that he erected and paid for while at the same time working unceasingly to bring about the betterment of conditions for the people of the Peninsular district as a whole.

In addition to building St. Augustine's Church, Father O'Callaghan also has erected the large parish house on F street, the St. Monica's Church and rectory on Dorchester street, the St. Augustine School and the St. Augustine Convent on F street.

It costs $35,000 a year to run the St. Augustine school alone, this being a twenty-two-room school with 1,050 pupils. But, while the total cost of erecting the buildings in question has amounted to a round $400,000 since Father O'Callaghan first assumed charge of the pastorate, almost forty-three years ago, he has paid it all off with the exception of a $14,000 debt on the school and convent. This debt, his parishioners say, will be cleared off by the coming reunion.

Boston Catholics Join in Celebration of Cardinal Gibbons' Silver Jubilee

Cardinal Gibbons under his coat of arms on receiving throne of Catholic Club.

Dr. Dunn of Boston, Knight of St. Gregory at Magnificent Reception.

CATHOLICS everywhere were deeply interested in and delighted with the magnificent reception to Cardinal Gibbons at the Catholic Club in New York, which marked the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood and the twenty-fifth of his elevation to the Cardinalate.

High officials of the church, prominent laity and Knights of the Order of St. Gregory contributed to the pomp and splendor of the occasion, with all the ceremony that would be rendered a prince of the church on a similar occasion in the city of Rome.

Boston was represented at the reception by Dr. William A. Dunn, Knight Commander of the Papal Order of St. Gregory the Great. He was present in the full court uniform of the order, which is of blue broadcloth, ornamented with silver. A picture was taken showing Cardinal Gibbons seated on a throne especially prepared in the ball room of the Catholic Club, on the Cardinal's right is Archbishop Farley, while in the cluster about the throne among the prelates is Dr. Dunn.

Address by the Cardinal.

Justice Dowling of New York, speaking for the members of the Catholic Club, made a brilliant address, closing with the fervent hope that the Cardinal would be spared many years to be paid the debt of gratitude which is his need from every true lover of America.

"I wish to thank Justice Dowling," said Cardinal Gibbons, in his reply, "for his touching reference to our Holy Father Pope Pius X., who has endeared himself to all of us by his apostolic virtues and who has won the sympathy of the whole Christian world by the unwarrantable insult recently offered to him in his own imperial city of Rome.

Catholic Club Complimented.

"It has been my privilege and good fortune to have known the last four Archbishops who have presided over the spiritual destinies of this great archdiocese—the lion-hearted Hughes, the gentle and courtly McCloskey, the polished and learned Corrigan and your present beloved Archbishop, who has been my sterling and steadfast friend, ready to assist me by his powerful influence in every emergency. I might truly call him my Ithus Achates.

"I know it is a source of great joy and consolation to your venerated Archbishop to have in his midst a club comprised of many of the leading Catholic citizens of New York. He regards you as his bodyguard, ever ready, like Napoleon's Old Guard, to call him in every emergency.

"A zealous and enlightened laity is the glory of the Christian church. The most luminous periods of the Church's history have been epochs conspicuous for laymen who have vindicated the cause of Christianity by the eloquence of their writings or by the unanimous sanctity of their lives. The golden age of Christianity gave birth to a long line of learned and intrepid laymen champions of the faith. Among others I might mention Justin Martyr, Minucius Felix and Lactantius, who is styled the Christian Cicero, in consequence of his elegant and ornate style.

"And in the nineteenth century France contributed to the cause of the Christian religion Chateaubriand, Montalembert and Frederick Ozanam. Spain has given Donoso Cortes; Germany has given us Windthorst; England her Sir Kenelm Digby and William G. Ward, and Ireland the great tribune Daniel O'Connell, whom a distinguished critic of another nation has pronounced the greatest orator of the nineteenth century. He could sway the multitude as the breeze of heaven sways the ripening field of grain. And Dr. Brownson has shed unfading glory on the church of this country by his luminous writings.

Lasting Triple Alliance.

When the Archbishop, the clergy and people are united as you are there is no such word as fail—you constitute a triple cord which cannot be broken; you form a triple alliance far more strong and enduring than the alliance of earthly rulers, for yours is a federation not flesh and blood, this alliance cemented by the divine virtues of faith, hope and charity.

Members of the Catholic Club, there are two paramount principles that govern your society and that are inscribed on your banner, namely, loyalty to country and devotion to your religion, and every member of this organization is a patriot, as he ought to be. No citizen should be a drone in the social beehive. No man among you should be an indifferent spectator of the moral, political and economic questions which affect the welfare of the Commonwealth. As you are illustrated in your life and property by the strong arm of the Government so should you all unite in upholding the hands of those who are charged with the administration of the Commonwealth.

"Think tied we live in a country where there is liberty without the tyranny of despotic authority without the toleration of despotism, and where the Government holds over us the aegis of its protection without interfering with the individual rights of conscience."

—From the address of Cardinal Gibbons at the New York Catholic Club celebration to his honor.

CARDINAL GIBBONS PRAISES SPIRIT OF U. S. GOVERNMENT

"Thank God we live in a country where there is liberty without the toleration of license and authority without the toleration of despotism, and where the government holds over us the aegis of its protection without interfering with the individual rights of conscience.

The Church and State.

"We have here no State Church, but there is no antagonism between Church and State. On the contrary, our civil and spiritual rulers mutually aid and support one another.

"I hope that the time will always continue when Bishops and clergy will devote their time and talents and daily toil to the service of the laity and will be ready, if necessary, to pour out their hearts' blood in their behalf, and when they will receive in return the affection and gratitude, the loyal support and the free will offerings of a loyal and devoted people.

"From the throne we have heard Cardinal greeted more than 2 men people who united to pay respect to him. Back of the throne were American flags, and the American colors were prominent in the throne itself. The shield bearing the coat-of-arms was quartered in the American colors and decorated with a star, representing Columbia.

Cross Over the Shield.

Above the shield was the cross of the church, made after a design used only for the church process, and above that was a Cardinal's hat, whose tassels, fifteen in number, indicated the rank above Archbishop, were draped in a conventional design.

Three lion heads, studded with gold and silver, indicated the nature of the [illegible] being celebrated, while the Cardinal's motto, "Piutto, Spiritum Tuum," formed the shield's base.

The entire effect was a piece of heraldic designing such as had never been attempted in America before, and was considered by the thousands who admired it as an impressive grouping of the American colors in a manner to serve the purposes of honoring the church's one American prince.

AMERICAN'S ENVOY TO IRELAND ON SCENE

C. O'Connell Galvin Begins Work on Story of Home Rule Fight.

HIS FIRST STOP IN LONDON.

Has Already Gathered Valuable Information for Exclusive Publication in American.

C. O'CONNELL GALVIN, the special correspondent of the Sunday AMERICAN, sent to England and Ireland to write a first-hand story of the great fight for Irish Home Rule, has cabled that he reached the other side in safety and has got down to work.

Knowing the situation well before he sailed for the foreign land and having a host of acquaintances who were on the lookout for him, Mr. Galvin did not lose a minute in beginning his work. He has already in preparation a series of articles such as [illegible] in a New England newspaper

Crisis for Ireland.

These articles will appear exclusive in the Sunday AMERICAN. Look out for the first one, because it will contain information that every lover of Ireland cannot afford to miss.

These are the most crucial days in the history of Ireland and the battle in the interest of the Emerald Isle is being waged both in Parliament in London and throughout Ireland. Mr. Galvin made his first stop in London, where he gathered valuable information from the statesmen of both England and Ireland about the fight.

This information is but the preliminary work that the Sunday AMERICAN'S correspondent expects to do. So that the people may fully understand what has been going on for twenty years in Ireland—during which time America has shown by generous help that the fight is at least partly ours—Mr. Galvin goes into the heart of Ireland and gets from the lips of the Irish people themselves the inside story.

Know's Ireland's Needs.

Mr. Galvin was born in Ireland and worked there as a newspaper man. He knows the Irish people, their hopes and aspirations. His facile pen will depict the story of the land of his birth with a sympathetic touch that will be appreciated by men and women who have knowledge of the heart-throbbing history of this little green spot of earth that juts out into the waters of the North Atlantic ocean.

Home rule and land of their own! That's the dream of Ireland, and it seems too good to be true, but the dream is about to be realized.

Like a long letter from home with a bunch of shamrocks in it will be Mr. Galvin's contributions to the Sunday AMERICAN. So on the lookout for them and be sure to get the first one

AMERICAN PUT AT LOW FIGURES

Only About One Quarter Valued at $1,000 Yearly by Bishop Lawrence.

ONE PASTOR DRAWING $318

One in Episcopal Diocese Is Paid Nearly $3,800 Annually for Work.

HOW much is the average minister worth?

Bishop Lawrence, who is chairman of a general committee in his own denomination to study and report upon the salaries of the ministers, recently said in a public address before the laymen of his own church at the Hotel Brunswick that only 200 to 300 ministers in every thousand are worth $1,000 a year.

Bishop Lawrence is noted for his keen business judgment and has been study'ng for some time the capabilities of many ministers

While professor in the Episcopal Theological school, Cambridge, he came into close contact with young men, who were studying for the ministry and he has watched the course of many of them since their graduation

Dr. Anderson's Opinion.

Rev. Dr. Asher Anderson, secretary of the National Congregational Council, who has had a large and varied experience in his denomination in watching the course of many ministers, said: "No doubt Bishop Lawrence has good ground for his remarks for he is a practical man. But I think that the ministers who may come in for this censure are not to be blamed

"We must find fault with our methods of training ministers. Back in the eighties, when the Home Missionary Society made great demands for ministers, many young men went into the ministry after receiving a limited theological education

"These men who have had a 'short cut' into the ministry and out after a few years that they are not sufficiently prepared for its work. They begin to regret that they did not receive a college education, which is an essential for any man who is looking forward to that profession to-day.

"The college training brings out the discipline of the mind. What is true of our church is true of other churches and of the Episcopal church in the far West, where many ministers have been ordained without much theological training.

Recently Remedied.

"This in recent years has been remedied and is being remedied to-day. More emphasis is now placed upon an educated ministry, and the former situation is being redeemed every year

"Bishop Lawrence, who recently went West, may have had this matter brought to his attention. I do not think that the accusation applies to the East. No better men are found in any profession than the average minister in he East, who does a wonderful work on a small capital and does it exceedingly well with small remuneration."

In the diocese of Massachusetts under Bishop Lawrence there is one minister who gets a yearly salary of $318.75, one $900, one $875 and one $800. There are nineteen who get $1,000 a year, two get $1,000, thirty-one at $1,200, seventeen at $1,500, five at $1,800, fifteen at $2,000, four at $2,500, three at $3,000, two at $3,500 and two at $4,700

How a Woman Markets Fruit

Farming is a new occupation for women. Some of the women in the Middle West have been very successful, and a leading weekly is full of stories of what these enterprising, aggressive Western women have done in fruit raising.

One of the most successful growers of grapes is a woman. She found that grapes were generally packed three bunches to a box and so displayed that their attractiveness was often lost. She conceived the idea of putting these grapes side by side in such a way that a third bunch could be introduced without marring the beauty of the whole. Then she tied each bunch with a large ribbon bow that matched the rich purple of the grape and timidly sent a sample box or two to one of the leading New York dealers.

"Send more of those 'ribbon grapes'!" was his order. "More and more!" came the orders until the demand exhausted the supply.

In other words, she had accomplished what many merchants are able to do—advertise their goods by some method to the most desirable trade.

The way in which she displayed her goods was a form of advertising, but the best form of advertising is newspaper advertising. It's the kind of advertising that reaches the widest market at the most opportune time and most frequently. It's the kind of advertising that the largest merchants find most successful.

The growth of the advertising of the Boston American, together with its circulation, is the best endorsement of its strong position in the New England field. During the last three months it has gained many columns in advertising over the corresponding period of last year, while other Boston papers have lost. It can help you to market your goods to the almost 400,000 people who make up its readers.

PEOPLE WIN IN GREAT FIGHT TO KEEP THE L STREET BATHS FREE

AMERICAN'S Vigorous Protest Against Unjust Fee on the Poor Forces Trustees to Yield

A care-free day in the ocean at L street, and some of the "Brownies" taking a sun bath at the most popular "swimming hole" in G

Sylvester Baxter, Magazine Writer, Deplores Restrictions That Call for Regulation Bathing Rig at Popular Beach.

THE people of Boston have expressed themselves through the AMERICAN in such a positive and determined manner that the scheme of the Trustees of the Bath Department to collect between $30,000 and $40,000 from the working people who use L Street Bath this Summer has been squelched and nothing more will be heard of it.

The Bath Trustees are now declaring that they never voted to collect 11 cents from L Street bathers, but before the AMERICAN attacked their plan they were proud of it and were telling how they were going to make the L Street Bathhouse self-supporting.

The AMERICAN could not see why public baths, which were built for poor people, should be made self-supporting at the expense of those who most deserved their privileges.

The public schools and libraries are not self-supporting. Why should the bath be so?

The AMERICAN stated its opinion vigorously and published statements from prominent citizens that were also vigorous.

The Bath Trustees awoke from their dreams of paying for departmental extravagance at the expense of the bathing public and broke for cover.

The City Council listened to oppose the charge, the Mayor said it was unreasonable, and the vast army of L Street patrons were furious.

MOST POPULAR BATH IN THE COUNTRY.

Inside of twenty-four hours it was officially reported at City Hall that the plan to hold up the patrons of L street had been abandoned.

Richard J. Walsh, chairman of the Bath trustees, even declared that the board had never voted to make the charge but were just talking about it.

There is no doubt, however, that if the charge could have been put into effect without attracting attention, it would have been done, just as the State bathhouse at Revere succeeded in making the public pay 25 cents for the privilege of a bath because no outcry was raised when the bathhouse was opened some ten years ago.

It meant nothing to the trustees of the bath department that they were changing the character of L street, the most popular and most generally commended bath in the United States if not in the world. They saw that more than 650,000 people used the bath last year and they saw a chance to collect a big fund from these people.

The AMERICAN intends that the L Street Bathhouse remain free for all times. It regrets that it seems necessary to make the small charge of five cents for bathing trunks to persons who do not own those valuable articles.

In the past there has been no need of bathing trunks at L street, and the popularity of the bath was built upon the fact that it was the only public bath in the United States where men could bathe legally and decently in the garb that nature provided.

Bathers Resent Action.

The increasing population on the Peninsular and the more frequent use of Dorchester Bay for pleasure yachts has given the excuse for the abolition of nude bathing against the protests of the patrons of the bath.

The bath is going to lose its distinction of being the only public bathing beach in the country where men could bathe in their Garden of Eden costume. The peculiar sheltered location of the bath, the wide expanse of unfrequented water in front of it made it possible to permit nude bathing, and the tremendous popularity of the bath had as much to do with this as freedom from restrictions as the lack of an admission price.

Many thousands of prominent and well-to-do men have been patrons of L street for many years, not because they could not afford to pay the high prices of other bathing beaches, but because they enjoyed the liberation from wet, sticky bathing suits.

Sylvester Baxter, the well-known magazine writer and worker for metropolitan improvements, is a habitue of L street and much opposed to the innovations there.

"L street bath has been ideal in the past, a little Arcady. Men were permitted to be natural there, and they bathed and sunned themselves in a delightful freedom from all conventions.

"I cannot too strongly express my disapprobation of the absurd prudery, the impudent officiousness of the bath trustees who voted away the rights of half a million persons without excuse or reason.

Many Aided Good Cause.

"They did it in mid-winter at a time when the L street bathers were scattered and unable to act together, when the thought of sea bathing was not prominent in their minds. If they had tried it in Summer it would have awakened as great a storm of indignation as the attempt to charge an admission fee has done."

Among the prominent people who joined with the AMERICAN in demanding that the L street bath should be kept free were Alice Stone Blackwell, Meyer Bloomfield, Miss Mary Boyle O'Reilly, President Walter Collins of the City Council, Congressman James M. Curley, ex-Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell, Joseph Lee of the School Committee, Warren F. Spaulding, Robert A. Woods and many others.

ALL TYPES IN THE LITTLE REPUBLIC AT THE L STREET BATHS

Connecting Roxbury and South Boston is a long road that used to be called Swett street until a few dwelling houses were erected upon it, and the young ladies who lived in them felt ashamed to give their addresses to gentlemen friends, because they didn't like the name of the street.

By special vote of the City Council the name was changed to Southampton, but it is the same street; a long dusty road crossing the marshes and an arm of the South Bay, and crossed by several railroads.

Any morning or afternoon during the warm weather one can see a steady procession moving over Southampton street, Roxbury kids going over to L street.

First of Kind in Country.

Sometimes they are barefoot and sometimes they wear shoes, but usually they are penniless save for one copper to spend for a towel. From Roxbury Crossing to L street is five miles by the Southampton street route, a hot sunny road on a Summer's day, but there is cool green water at the end of it, and the return can be made in the shade of the evening.

Similar processions are moving down Dorchester and over Dover street from the South End, and when they meet at the bathhouse they have become an army.

The L street bath has been in existence for more than a generation. It was the first public bath in the United States located on a beach, and for many years has been the only public bath where nude bathing is permitted.

For many years it was located across the marshes at the foot of L street, a group of low unpainted buildings with high fences shutting off a strip of beach. It was only available for bathing for a couple of hours before high tide and the same length of time on the ebb. In those days the ocean departed entirely from that part of Dorchester Bay at ebb tide.

Away back in 1853 a boulevard from Franklin Park to City Point was planned and the boulevard would have destroyed the L street bath. Sylvester Baxter showed the Park Commission's architects how they could build their boulevard and preserve the bathhouse.

To-day the boulevard is finished and to harmonize with its more beautiful surroundings the bathhouse buildings were rebuilt with some degree of appropriateness and then buried as much as possible in shrubbery.

The beach was very much lengthened, provision made for women at K street, just below and a separate place provided for boys.

Has 1,100 Lockers.

The bath has 1,100 lockers, and as many as six persons can use one locker at a time. On a busy day there are frequently 3,000 people in the water at once, and during the entire day as many as 20,000 persons have been known to visit the bath.

The city has dredged the bay in front of the bath so that to-day it is possible to bathe there at all hours and thus the capacity of the bath house is very much increased.

The system at L street is truly wonderful. A line hundreds of feet long is disposed of in a very little while, it is seldom necessary to wait for a closet, and when the towels give out the patrons have no objection to drying off in the sun or with their shirts.

One of the first sights to greet a visitor to L street is the curley white hair and tanned visage of Charlie Cox, for many years the superintendent and still connected with the bath. Mr. Cox has a marvelous memory for faces and can remember patrons after years of absence.

The closets stretch out to right and left and it is the work of a few minutes for the visitors to strip and get out upon the beach. From the boys' beach at the left comes a steady uproar as the unseen youngsters dive and splash and play games. Behind the high fence on the right is the women's beach. The women and girls are obliged to wear bathing suits although the men and boys have never been compelled to do so. Never mind, the men and boys will also wear bathing suits in the future.

One on Big Raft.

There is an enormous raft moored about 100 feet from the shore and it is packed with the white, yellow and brown forms of sun bathers. The yellow gravel sand is also spotted with sun bathers, while the water is dotted with heads.

Fifty feet beyond the raft there is a row of barrels marked danger, which means that persons who swim outside are in very deep water. Beyond that are several rowboats with life guards always on the alert. The beach is perhaps 400 feet long and the diving raft is nearly 100 feet by 40 feet.

That is L Street Bath.

Up near the locker rooms is a handball court where experts at the Irish game perform to a running fire of comment from other experts, who are waiting for a chance to play. There are shower baths, lavatories and other conveniences in abundance, and Superintendent Mike Kelly is on the job to see that everybody is suitably fed.

There is nothing of the charity atmosphere about L street. The bath is free like the American nation, and its patrons are just as independent. Without bad clothes the tramp looks as good as the millionaire, and they are both there.

All Professions Represented.

All professions are represented. The minister, the bum, medicine and the press. Bankers and brokers and their office boys are in attendance, and there are more politicians than there are at City Hall the day a new Mayor takes office.

It is no wonder that the bath trustees thought that such men could afford to pay a small entrance fee. They could, but the rest of the patrons, the other 90 per cent. of the 650,000 who go there every year in search of bringing to the bath, would be compelled to stay away.

L street is a little republic where all men are equal. Such distinguished writers as Arthur Sherwood Flier and James Connolly, and Vincent Brown are not so important as Peter McNally or Sam Mahony who can swim all day or stay under water for whole minutes.

The man with the best physique is the most admired and the distinguished lawyer with the big head and frail body is a laughing stock beside the brewery wagon driver.

Real Heroes Of the Bath.

The daring swimmer or a fine handball player is a hero at L street and those who can do those things and amount to something else in the world outside L street are doubly fortunate.

[illegible] Smith Rodman [illegible] at L street and [illegible] as James M. Curley, Ex-Congressman O'Connell, Ex-Congressman McCleary, Tom Powers and Edward L. Hyde know the value of [illegible]

The connection [illegible] with the big head and frail body is a laughing stock beside the brewery wagon driver.

The contest on [illegible] is varied. Here are a sweet and nimble Lilliputian [illegible] a writer and a journalist discussing the latest book and a college professor telling [illegible] claims from a day laborer.

DON'T TAX BATHING, SAYS O'CONNELL

For fifteen years I have enjoyed bathing at the L Street Baths, and I consider it the best institution in Boston. L Street has been the most democratic place in this city. The rich and poor, banker and laborer meet there on an even plane, and a perfect picture of true democracy is shown there. It is little short of an outrage to compel people to pay for the privilege of using the water.—By former Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell.

Customer: "I suppose you have O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels? Well, I should like to have them put on these new shoes before you send them to me."
Salesman: "Yes, we have them and can put them on very quickly. The best time to put on O'Sullivan's Heels is when shoes are new. Besides the comfort of wearing them, they really increase the life of your shoes for live rubber wears longer than hard leather.

O'Sullivan's Heels of Live Rubber absorb the shock to your spine and nervous system that comes from every step you take on a hard surface.

Frayed and worn-out nerves are typical of civilization. These conditions and the diseases that they lead to have increased several hundred per cent. in the last fifty years.

The wearing of hard leather heels has done its part in bringing about this result. The barefoot savage, treading lightly on a natural carpet of leaves and grass, has no "nerves"—but civilized man, jarring the delicate machinery of his nervous system to pieces by the pounding of hard leather heels on stone pavements, is a prey to nervous disorders.

Try O'Sullivan's Heels of New Live Rubber. Put them on every pair of shoes you have. Then get out in the open air and

O'Sullivanize Your Walk

To "O'Sullivanize" your walk means fresh air in your lungs, disappearance of the blues, and a growth in the optimism that comes from physical well-being.

With O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on your shoes, you can walk farther and with less fatigue. They give to your feet the light, elastic step of youth.

They are made for men, women and children. When attached to the shoes they are invisible.

O'Sullivan's Heels—made of pure live rubber with all the spring in it—may be found at any shoeman's and at shoe stores. They cost 50c attached.

Do Not Show Your Age in Your Complexion

By DOROTHY VENT

(From San Francisco Examiner)

What woman would not look young if she had a clear, soft complexion?

Perhaps the most wonderful skin treatment is one of the most simple. Dr. Takka Quoido, Japan's famous skin specialist, gives San Francisco women the following advice:

"Yes, we never grow old in Japan—I mean the women's faces never show age. All Japanese women use mayatone dissolved in witchhazel, and massage the solution thoroughly into the face, neck and arms once or twice a day. This treatment is absolutely harmless even to a baby's skin and gives wonderful results, removing all manner o facial blemishes. It also prevents the growth of hair. You never saw a Japanese woman with hair on her face.

"Take a small original package of mayatone and dissolve it all in eight ounces of witchhazel, and you are supplied with this aid to youth."

THE LOVE OF CRUELTY

We Call This "Savagery."

Cop, ight, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner.

LADIES and gentlemen of the olden days amused themselves with "sports" in which men butchered each other.

That was thought to be noble, legitimate sport, calculated to make men brave. It has passed away.

Gentlemen and ladies in America until recently amused themselves with pigeon shooting. The birds were butchered as they were released from the cage, some were killed outright and others left with broken wings to die slowly in misery. A series of newspaper editorials published throughout the country destroyed that "sport." Certain legislators, defending it, said that it would be a sad day for America when the citizens "could not bear the sight of blood." Apparently they are doing fairly well without the sight of pigeon blood.

Gentlemen of good old English days enjoyed bull baiting. The bulldogs were trained to seize the bull by the tender, sensitive muzzle. Sometimes the bulldog was gored and smashed to death, sometimes the bull was horribly torn. ALWAYS THE ONLOOKERS GREATLY ENJOYED THE BLOODY "SPORT," and that was supposed to be a good thing for the courage of England. But it has passed away.

Dog fighting has disappeared, cock fighting has disappeared—except occasionally when criminals and drunkards gather in a vile resort and refresh themselves with the brutality that their natures crave.

Even the rat pit has disappeared. That gentle sport is now forbidden, and a "gentleman" may no longer amuse himself by putting one hundred rats in a pit with a terrier and watching the terrier kill the rats.

In short, what certain classes contemptuously call "moralists and goody-goodies" have interfered very much of late with the so-called "innocent amusements of healthy, natural men."

It has gone so far that "gentlemen" may not even organize themselves in a racing association and open a public gambling hell in the name of sport and pay the expenses of amusement by taking in at the gate and through their partners, the "bookmakers," MONEY STOLEN BY CLERKS, OR TAKEN BY FATHERS FROM THE CHILDREN THAT NEED IT.

Truly, the "manly sports" are interfered with. These are days of petticoat government, days when the "moral busybody" triumphs amazingly.

* * *

In no civilized country is man permitted to take two miserable, inferior animals and set them to fighting and tearing each other for his amusement.

But, strange to say, in this land of civilization prize fight promoters may still take two human beings and set them to fighting each other, after paying an admission fee ten times that charged for the greatest opera. And degraded humanity enjoys itself intensely watching a process in which two men in the pink of physical condition fight brutally until one, bloody, bruised, battered, conquered in body and spirit, is knocked senseless to the floor.

That is a spectacle of which the United States was recently the theatre.

The administration of one entire State disgraced itself—PROSTITUTED ITSELF FOR A LITTLE PROFIT—and welcomed the collection of criminals, thugs, fight promoters, pickpockets, gamblers and general worthlessness that was willing to spend money for the pleasure of seeing a man-fight.

Great events were ignored while attention was concentrated on a brutal, contemptible, inhuman spectacle.

A black giant in his prime was selected to amuse the nation and to make a few schemers rich by battering down a white man weakened by the drunkenness and the disease that always accompany the prize fight career. And idiots who talked about the supremacy of the races and men calling themselves intelligent solemnly theorized as to the importance of the victory on the white side or the black side.

It would have been just as important, just as full of meaning, far more appropriate, if these prize fight schemers had gone into the sewer and taken out one brown rat and one black rat and set them to fight for the supremacy of the black or the brown race among the rats, for among rats, at least, physical supremacy would mean something.

There are those that ask, "Is there any harm in boxing, any harm in the manly art?"

There is perhaps no harm in boxing, although there is no reason why a BRUTAL exercise should be chosen—one most brutal and useless—when other exercises worthy of human beings are so plentiful. It is not mere boxing skill that draws crowds to prize fights.

It's FIGHTING, THE LOVE OF BRUTALITY, THE HUNGER FOR BLOODSHED OF THE HALF-EDUCATED SAVAGE.

It is the survival of the picture so graphically described in a few words by Francis Parkman in his life of La Salle:

> Soon after their arrival a party of warriors appeared with a young prisoner belonging to one of the tribes of that region. Gallinee wanted to beg or buy him from his captors, but the Senecas had other intentions. "I saw," writes the priest, "the most miserable spectacle I ever beheld in my life." It was the prisoner tied to a stake and tortured for six hours with diabolical ingenuity, while the crowd danced and yelled with delight, and the chiefs and elders sat in a row smoking their pipes and watching the contortions of the victim with an air of serene enjoyment. The body was at last cut up and eaten, and in the evening the whole population occupied themselves in scaring away the angry ghost by beating with sticks against the bark sides of the lodges.

What has a modern prize fight to do with that scene in the wild North American forest two hundred years ago? Everything to do with it. Those "Seneca Indians" wouldn't sell their prisoner BECAUSE THEY WANTED THE HAPPINESS OF TORTURING HIM. THEY WANTED TO SEE HIM BLEED. THEY WANTED TO SEE HOW MUCH HE COULD STAND. THEY WANTED TO KNOW HOW "GAME" HE WAS. THE OLD MEN AND THE WOMEN AND THE CHILDREN LOOKED ON, WHILE THE YOUNG "BRAVES" EXHAUSTED THEIR INGENUITY IN HORRIBLE CRUELTY.

The difference between that scene and the scene which certain officials permit in the moving pictures of a prize fight is simply a difference of time.

No man doubts the effect that must have been produced upon the minds of those Indian children when they were permitted to watch that dreadful scene. What could they be but cruel and barbarous as grown men?

How can any sane man doubt the effect produced upon the child of to-day when that child is permitted to witness in moving pictures the reproduction of a disgraceful prize fight?

And what did the men go out to see when they started for a trip across this continent?

Thousands of them that wouldn't move from their front door to see the wonders of the Rockies or to realize the greatness of their country travelled days and nights for the pleasure of seeing ONE MAN TORTURE ANOTHER. They wanted to see how much one of them would stand—the one that was to be beaten. They wanted to know how "game" HE would prove to be.

And This We Call "Civilization."

* * *

There are idiots that say it makes a boy "manly" to fight. And there are heavy, dull fathers that encourage their little boys to fight—boys possibly that have in them some of the humanity that such fathers lack.

What has fist fighting to do with a decent human brain, what has it to do with modern life, with justice or the protection of the weak in our day? All the talk about physical bravery, calling on little boys to be brave and fight, simply encourages the little boys to lie and brag, makes those that have actual spirituality feel guilty because they lack the quality of the bulldog or the wild boar.

How can there be any good in a false standard which makes the young brute with low forehead, beefy hands and dull mind the boasting superior at school of such a child as Shelley must have been?

What is the long struggle of humanity, with the teachings of its various religions, but one long effort to substitute justice, brotherly love, kindness and law for brutality?

What can be more irreligious or shocking than the argument that any question can be properly solved with a blow in the face?

What is the task of a race that has come up from universal cannibalism to our comparative stage of civilization? Is that task the development of the spirit or of the body, of mind or of brute force?

Could there be anything more idiotic than the father who on Sunday solemnly reads to his child the story of Christ, who turned the other cheek, and on Monday says to the same child, "If Willie Jones does that again, hit him in the nose"?

It ought not to be necessary to offer to any man an argument against a so-called "sport" that is brutal, degrading, always accompanied by dishonesty, vice and disease. Yet there are those that defend this "sport," even defend it, calling it manly, just as the medicine man of the Senecas would probably have defended the torture of that young warrior.

What is it that keeps fighting alive? Fighting is kept alive by fighting. The fighting instinct is kept alive by fighting talk, by admiration for fighting, by encouragement of fighting. What the prize fight, the fist fight, the personal encounter, is to the individual, WAR IS TO THE NATION. You cannot destroy war in a nation while there is brutality and fighting in the individual. Is not fighting, war, the most destructive and the most expensive of all the curses of mankind?

Do you know what wars, past and to come, mean—what it cost the country last year? Five hundred millions of dollars!

Every year for pensions—rewards for those that were compelled to fight in the past—and for the navy and the army kept ready for future fights, the people of this country alone are taxed five hundred million dollars a year.

Think of the total, six thousand millions of dollars, spent in America already on war, on our army and navy! An expenditure of five hundred millions a year now, an expenditure constantly increasing and destined constantly to increase until national conscience or national bankruptcy shall call a halt!

Five thousand millions of dollars at least we shall spend for war in the next ten years.

Do you know what that means? Twice every year the nation could build the Panama Canal with the money that would be saved but for the curse of war.

With the men and the money wasted on war roads could be built throughout this country every year.

That vast sum thrown away, that great amount of labor wasted! The skill, intelligence and loyalty of officers and engineers and soldiers would irrigate the deserts, reclaim the swamp lands, give homes, happiness and wealth to millions.

As the nation spends money lavishly and recklessly for wars past, for equipment to-day, for possible war in the future, so you see the individual spending recklessly for the fierce pleasures of brutal fighting.

The man who paid fifty dollars to see a negro fight a white man would most probably have refused five dollars to his own brother.

The fighting spirit must cease, be taken out of the individual; the love of brutality must die, BY LACK OF GRATIFICATION.

Neither the animal body nor the animal craving can live unless it be fed. Brutality must be starved to death by the lack of brutal spectacles.

The prize fight ring in this country is doomed—it is safe to say that.

And honor is due to those that have made this fight against it, to the officials, Governors, Mayors, police chiefs, clergymen and all others who have realized that men were put here not to fight each other, but to conquer nature, and to establish on the earth a great brotherhood of peace and happiness.

FOREIGN DEVILS' OR CHRISTIAN TEACHERS

by ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

[illegible] statistics before me of two American missions in the Far East. One had existed [illegible] and had spent $100,000,000 in [illegible] exactly people actively at work.

It had received 200 converts. "A large [illegible] number," the Consul said, "are to the coolie class, and those converts are simply embracing Christianity because they think it will improve their [illegible] prospects."

The other mission showed a similar situation. Two hundred and fifty converts [illegible] only years and $50,000,000 of money [illegible] to achieve this result.

[illegible] those who criticise do not stop to consider the immeasurable small streams of [illegible] flowing from the few main rivers of [illegible] mission work out into the jungles of ignorance, unwashed humanity. Indeed, it seems to me that almost every man, woman or child in the Orient (of the common masses) who is clean or possessed of any education can trace the cause back to the missions. Not all are willing to acknowledge it, however. One eminent physician in China, who is bitterly opposed to the missions, is silent regarding the fact that he was assisted through college by the missionary societies, one English, one American.

But the ignorance of our missionaries regarding all religions save their own, and the quarrelsome spirit shown in the various Christian factions, he criticised justly.

Not one man or woman who goes to the Orient to convert the natives knows what was taught by Buddha or Confucius. They regard both men as heathens, and antagonise those they would convert by their attitude toward them.

How much wiser it would be were the missionary to interest himself first in their ideas; to show a respect for the feelings of the pupils, and then to gradually lead them to an understanding of better ideals. Instead of classing Buddha and Confucius among the devils why not study them and try and bring the benighted Oriental mind to a realization that the religion of those great masters is not found in any of the temples and shrines of the entire Orient to-day; and then to inculcate the simple creed of the later Master, Christ, and bring them to love of Him, with no effort of destroying their faith in the goodness and godliness of the earlier masters?

It is a curious fact that in the land where Buddha was born and in the environment where his teachings made their first great impression, and where innumerable temples still stand dedicated to his name, there remains nothing of his beautiful and broad philosophy.

He taught compassion, sympathy, self-conquest, universal love, development of the consciousness of the God within, by meditation and right living. He taught that the only salvation was found by attaining this union with the one God, through personal effort, yet to-day, in all the Buddhist temples of the Orient images of devils, demons and hideous idols are being offered sacrifices, and superstition runs rampant. All that Buddha preached against is called Buddhism; all that he devoted his whole life to formulate in a beautiful and helpful religion is swept away and forgotten. The sensible missionary would be one who should endeavor to tear down the rotten, old, vermin-filled building, reared on a beautiful foundation, and to erect a clean and sanitary one, at the same time, suitable structure in its place instead of endeavoring to destroy even the solid old foundation. To add a beautiful and lofty tower and to call that tower "Christianity" would not be to sin against the laws of architecture.

For Buddha and Christ taught one code of morals—one set of principles.

In Japan—in Java, in Burma, the people are most amiable and gentle, one with another. It is difficult for them to understand how the Christians can be so aggressive and quarrelsome among themselves if, as they claim, Christ's creed is one of love and peace and good will. It is difficult also for the Oriental mind to understand how the missionary seems to value money so highly while teaching that the rich man cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven easily.

In China the missionaries have been working spatiently for more than half a century. Yet to-day, when the white people are carried through the streets of Canton in Sedan chairs, the cry of the coolies is "We be sightseers is, "Make way for the foreign devils!"

For, despite all our efforts, that is how they regard us.

MRS. GLOVER'S LIFE STORY

MRS. GLOVER, WHO TELLS OF STIRRING EVENTS IN HER LIFE

Tragic Climax Is Reached in Autobiography of Waltham Widow, Who Relates Stirring Incidents of Her Career.

MRS. LILLIAN M. GLOVER'S life story, written exclusively by her for the Sunday AMERICAN, reaches a dramatic and tragic climax in to-[illegible] instalment. The widow has revealed the mysterious crime that snuffed out the life of her husband, Clarence F. Glover, in his laundry at Waltham.

The [illegible] of wonderful woman's career has been read from the start of its publication with increasing interest. There will be another instalment [illegible] to-morrow.

In the [illegible] Mrs. Glover has told of her early life in West Acton, her trip to Boston when she was a girl of ten, her heroic and successful attempts to [illegible] and [illegible] much by acquaintance with and two marriages of [illegible] L. SOCIETY GOES A-MAYING IN MOTORS; WITH SEASON OF JUNE BRIDES AT HAND

Weddings of the Month of Roses Promise to Outnumber and to Rival in Brilliancy Those of Past Seasons in Boston — Bishop Lawrence's Debutante Daughter Ruth Soon to Become Mrs. L. P. Reed.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

MAY, with its merry-go-round of events, presents a scene of social pageantry and a series of diversions so delightful that we will not realize its going until on blossomy wings it has taken flight and we are "knee-deep in June"—then our numerous brides of rare distinction, the Country Club races and college functions will claim us utterly.

As the sweet May madness creeps into our blood the whole world of society goes a-Maying in motors. Every ride out into the gay New England country sides is a joy-ride and banners of bloom herald the happy procession.

But in the midst of all the brides of June with their happy affairs stand out conspicuously, and weddings of the rose month promise to this year surpass those of any previous season. There's a whole galaxy of the loveliest brides imaginable and the whole world of fashion is waiting with keenest anticipation to pay them tribute. There are brides young and brides beautiful—in fact, brides of every description to tread the rose-strewn path altarward.

SUSAN FELLOWES DAVIS TO WED.

The initial bride of the month of roses will be that interesting bit of femininity Miss Susan Fellowes Davis, who on June 1 becomes the bride of James Edward Gardner, Jr., the ceremony to take place in the First Unitarian Church, Canton avenue, Milton, at 4 o'clock. The prospective bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. James E. Gardner of Hubbard Park, Cambridge, and is a graduate of Harvard in the class of '08.

Miss Davis is the second daughter of Charles Davis of East Milton. The older sister is Miss Pauline Davis, and both girls are prominently identified with the Vincent Club, their clever dancing always making one of the most interesting features of the annual club show.

The two girls were presented at the same time three years ago. Directly following the wedding, which is to be a decidedly brilliant affair, there will be a reception at "Carmarthen," the home of the bride's father.

June 3 seems to be particularly favored among the brides, and no less than half a dozen of our most prominent ones have chosen that date for their nuptials. Among the brides of that day will be Miss Florence Cobb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chandler Cobb, who weds Walter Brooks. The bride is a sister of Miss Beatrice Cobb, one of the important debutantes of the past season. The wedding is to be a church affair and will be followed by a large reception at the Cobb residence.

Miss Caroline Gay has chosen the same date for her wedding to Albert Gardner Mason. Miss Gay is an especially attractive girl and will make the loveliest of brides.

The same date has been chosen by Ruth Lawrence for her wedding to Lansing P. Reed of New York, for which invitations have just been issued. The ceremony will take place at high noon in Emmanuel Church, with the bride's father officiating, and will be followed by a reception at the Lawrence residence in Commonwealth avenue.

Miss Lawrence is one of the five daughters of Bishop and Mrs. Lawrence, and ever since her debut has figured conspicuously in all affairs of society. She has won considerable fame for herself on the tennis courts at Longwood and Bar Harbor where her father owns a Summer home, and has likewise been conspicuous in the affairs of the Vincent Club set and [illegible] gayeties of the season in town. The wedding will be among the most brilliant of June, and the ceremony will be witnessed by fashionables from all [illegible]

An interesting out-of-town wedding on the 3d will be that of Miss Gertrude Cheever and Seton Porter, which is to take place at Far Rockaway, L. I., and which many of our Boston fashionables will go on to attend. Miss Cheever's father, John Dow Cheever, is a nephew of Dr. David Cheever of Boylston street and is a cousin of Dr. David Cheever who married Jane Sargent.

"To Them That Hath"

A SHORT SERMON TO FAT FOLKS.

"To them that hath shall be given" is a sentence that applies to fat people very neatly. It is common knowledge that once a human being begins to fatten up, to what they have already is added more than they want until finally a stage is reached where reductions must be made or decided disadvantage results.

Then comes forward the ages-old query, "Reduce—but how?" To the uninformed nothing suggests itself but the (to them) twin evils—less eating—more activity. They contemplate a more or less lengthy siege of dieting and exercising. So it may be said safely that every man or woman in the land now undergoing the fattening-up process has his or her mental eye fixed dubiously on that not far distant day when he or she will have to don the "ashes and sackcloth of reduction.

This is not an enlivening prospect, and so it is with considerable satisfaction that we announce the emancipation of the fat. Nowadays one may reduce much or little, a pound a day if desired, or hold their fat in check, absolutely stationary, without doing a tap of exercise, missing a single meal, doing a particle of harm or causing a solitary wrinkle. All that's required, as hundreds testify, is the taking after meals and at bedtime of one Marmola Prescription Tablet, which tablets are sold by the Marmola Co., 180 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., or any good druggist, at the uniform price of 75 cents, this sum being accepted for a case of tablets so well and generously filled that even one produces desirable results.

HUB RECORD BROKEN FOR MAY MARRIAGES

This year Boston has had more May brides than ever and there are still more to follow. The wedding on the 27th of Miss Katherine Day Andrews and Clarence C. Little will be among the most interesting of the early Spring. The ceremony will take place at St. Paul's Church in Brookline, and will be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Day Andrews of Fisher avenue. The bride is one of the most attractive girls of her set, and with her two sisters, the Misses Ellen and Elizabeth Andrews as attendants, will make one of the most charming bridal groups imaginable. They are all brunettes of medium size and all exceedingly pretty. The bride's two sisters were debutantes of the past W[illegible]

Mr. Little is well known among the smartest young club men about town and took his A. B. at Harvard last June. He is this year taking a course in applied biology [illegible] the graduate school and at the same time serving as private secretary to President Lowell. He is a member of the Institute Dickey and Pudding clubs.

The most important wedding of the coming week will be that to-morrow of Mrs. Gwendolyn Whistler Howell of New York and Lenox to Percy Haughton, Harvard coach, Harvard graduate and prominent Boston clubman. The wedding takes place very quietly at the home of the [illegible] aunt, Mrs. Joseph Whistler in Lenox.

Miss Nan Galtier of Baltimore, daughter of Mrs. A. S. Galtier will be the bride's only attendant. Instead of taking an extended European trip, as at first planned, Mr. Haughton and his bride will take but a short tour in America and then settle down in the North Shore for the Summer. Mrs. Howell is the widow of the Rev. Richard Lewis Howell, the [illegible] clergyman whose first wife was a Miss Drexel of Philadelphia. The bride is [illegible] daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Th[illegible] Whistler of Baltimore and is identified with [illegible] the largest and most important S[illegible] families.

Many Bostonians have received invitations from Mr. and Mrs. E. Mott Hare of Philadelphia [illegible] the wedding of their second daughter, Phyllis Hare, and W. Kemble Yarrow, the ceremony to take place on Wednesday at "Stony-hurst," Strafford, the beautiful Summer estate of the Hares. The parents of the bride will entertain a house party over the occasion, and among the Boston girls included among the guests will be Wilhelmia Shreve of Beacon street, Brookline.

SOCIETY GOSSIPS OF BUDDING ROMANCES

Many Engagement Announcements of More Than Passing Interest Expected Soon.

Engagements, announced and unannounced, are the order of the hour and society gossips over the tea-cups of all the budding romances, among them that of one pretty debutante of the past season and a Harvard senior. They are seen so much together that even their intimates are beginning, as one bud remarked recently, "to save their pennies for flowers." The girl is petite and exceedingly pretty, with dark hair and eyes and perfect rose leaf complexion. She is winsome, talented and wealthy, and he certainly plays the role of the devoted swain to perfection. It is said, though the young people themselves are exceedingly quiet about the affair, that the engagement will be announced [illegible] falls on June 22.

Then there's the romance of another prominent girl of the smart set, one of the finest girl skippers along the North Shore, [illegible] skill as the [illegible] She's one of [illegible] and a well known [illegible] Her prospect[illegible] Harvard [illegible] are often seen [illegible] and as they [illegible] upon the match is declared by all to be [illegible] should it really terminate in an engagement a most [illegible]

Mrs. Alvan Bond Fuller of the Beaconsfield, Brookline, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Martha Rose, to Oscar Lawrence Halsey of St. Louis, Mo. Though no exact date has as yet been set for the wedding it is thought it may also be [illegible] of early June.

Another [illegible] of Miss [illegible] daughter of Dr. and Mr[illegible] of Newbury street [illegible] of Mrs. J[illegible] Miss Cushing is a winsome girl rather more of the clinging than the athletic type, and is a prime favorite among her associates. Her sisters are Mary, Helen and Margaret. Mr. S[illegible] is a Harvard man graduating with [illegible] class of '07, and is prominently [illegible] with many [illegible] including the [illegible] Athletic, Eastern Yacht, Automobile and Tennis and Racquet.

Last in the Long List of Charity Entertainments the Horse Show Held at the Arena in Aid of the Floating Hospital, in Charge of Women, Dorothy Forbes, Mrs. R. L. Agassiz and Alice Sargent Being in Charge.

THE last in the long list of fashionable [illegible] for charity this season was the Horse Show held the past week in the Arena for the benefit of that most appealing philanthropy, the Floating Hospital, and in [illegible] signs [illegible] goodly sum was realized. Rather unusual was the fact that the show was in charge of women, three of the most popular Boston horsewomen making up the committee: Miss Dorothy Forbes, Mrs. R. L. Agassiz and Miss Alice Sargent.

Among the society people making entries and much in evidence the [illegible] the show were the Misses Esther and [illegible] Foss, daughters of the Governor; Miss Helen Bennett of Commonwealth avenue, Mrs. Charles A. Munn, who had several entries, Miss Frances Bradley of Commonwealth avenue, Miss Alice Thorndike, M[illegible] Mrs. Charles E. Ware, Miss Dorothy Mandell, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft and Miss Forbes.

The last night was particularly interesting, and while the boxes were not filled, [illegible] there was a fine showing of society.

The Governor's Box.

[illegible] Mrs. Foss in black [illegible] hat and the Misses Foss, dressed alike in trig black walking suits and large black hats faced [illegible]

Miss Dorothy Forbes, who was exceedingly busy [illegible] entries and managing the various events, wore a tailored natural colored linen suit and a black hat trimmed with blue and white mixture plumes. She seemed to be everywhere and proved anew her ability for generalship which she displayed so [illegible] [illegible] of the Vincent Club [illegible] years. In the Forbes box were her father, J. Murray Forbes, and her sister, Mary Forbes, who was conspicuous in her blue riding habit and tall silk riding hat.

Miss Alice Sargent, who was in the box with her interesting sister-in-law, Mrs. A. Robeson Sargent, was in a suit of dark blue cloth and a wide brimmed hat of emerald green straw, trimmed with large white wings. Mrs. Sargent, whose gowns are always more or less extreme, wore a tan mixture and [illegible] bobble skirt [illegible] trimmed with [illegible]

Miss Sargent Gets a Blue.

M[illegible] for the impromptu [illegible] event for ladies and succeeded [illegible] carrying off the blue. Among her [illegible] were Miss Marion Lassell, Rosamond Bradley, Muriel Crocker, Mrs. Charles A. Munn and Mrs. Harold Baker. Miss Dorothy Mandell, who was in a box with several friends, was in blue [illegible]

Miss Rosamond Bradley, whose mother and sister sailed recently for Europe, wore a trig walking suit of black serge and a [illegible] hat.

Mrs. Samuel J. Mixter, who is always [illegible] at any event for charity, was [illegible] handsome gown of gray [illegible] with black. She was among those entertaining parties, and as usual made a delightful hostess.

Mrs. Charles A. Munn, who in her girlhood days so recently left behind, was Mary Astor Paul of Philadelphia, still looks more like a debutante than a matron, and on Thursday evening was especially attractive in black and a black hat faced with white and trimmed with large white wings.

Mrs. Larz Anderson Back.

Miss A[illegible] was in dark blue, Miss [illegible] in blue and Olivia [illegible]

Mrs. Larz Anderson, who has just returned from a trip, was in black and had among her guests, Mrs. Charles P. Gardenough, 2d, in black satin and large black hat.

Mrs. Harold Baker, who is quite as expert a horsewoman as she is a skater, was in black and won much admiration by her excellent driving.

Mrs. W. S. Butler was with several friends and was regal in black satin and large black hat trimmed with black plumes.

Miss Muriel Crocker was in black with old rose hat and Miss Marion Lassell were blue.

MISS SEARS TO PLAY TENNIS AT NEWPORT

Athletic Young Women of Resort to Show Skill in Swimming Matches.

SMART SET IS RETURNING

Many Arrive at Colony Prepared to Remain Until the Season's End.

NEWPORT, May 13.—Miss Eleonora Sears of Boston is scheduled to be at Newport for the national lawn tennis tournament, the horse show and for the amateur lawn tennis championship, in which she will be the central figure. Harold Sterling Vanderbilt's mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, will have Miss Sears as a house guest at Marble house. It may come to pass that Miss Sears will enter in a series of swimming matches which the Newport cottage colony will hold at Bailey's Beach before the season is over. These contests are to be among the athletic young women of Newport, with Miss Christine Warren also as a star performer. Some dainty cups will be given as prizes.

The extensive grounds of the eighteen links golf course at the Newport Golf Club are being gone over with a steam roller as well as much other work preparatory to the opening of the club by the first of June. The Newport Golf Club was started in 1892 at Bateman's Point, and in 1894 the Newport Country Club organized with the idea of having both golf and polo at the same place. A polo field was built for the Westchester Polo Club at a cost of $25,000, but the dampness of the field prevented its being used, and the polo club went to Bateman's Point and established its field there. The golf club property is taxed for $50,000. Lispenard Stewart who has been president for a number of years desires to retire, and a new official will have to be named in the place of the late Nathaniel Thayer who was the vice president. As Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer of Boston is in mourning, and Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll will be in Europe, their places on the Women's Committee of the Bridge Whist Association of the Newport Golf Club will have to be filled with new officers.

Ellsworth J. Curley of the Blue Grass section in Kentucky has taken the Thorn villa on Narragansett avenue, known as Stoneleigh.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Laurens Van Alen (Margaret Post), who are at Newport, are sailing for Europe on May 20 and will return the first week in July. They leave the children at Rosetta villa.

Alexander S. Cochran of the New York Yacht Club, owner of the fast schooner yacht Westward, and famed as the richest bachelor in America, is expected to take a Newport cottage for the coming season, all of which will be pleasant news for ambitious mammas with marriageable daughters.

Mrs. J. Deforest Danielson, who has been in Newport on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. James Lowell Putnam, will soon sail for Europe for an absence of six weeks.

It is the intention of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas to come to Newport with their baby boy as soon as possible for the Summer in Newport, occupying their cottage on Kay street.

Reginald C. Vanderbilt, while in England recently, purchased the English hackney stallion Wembley Sensation to add to his string of show horses. The animal has arrived at Sandy Point Farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr. (Grace Wilson), will be among those Americans who will be in London for the coronation jubilee and soon after which they will return to Newport and be at the William Waldorf Astor villa for about five weeks.

James J. Van Alen is having his Wakehurst villa improved with special reference to the ballroom and the mahogany room, at an estimated expense of $4,000.

Mrs. Howell's Wedding.

Newport is much interested in the wedding of the beautiful Mrs. Gwendolyn Whistler Howell of New York to Percy D. Haughton of Boston on May 15 at Plumbstead, the home of the bride's aunt in Lenox. For a number of Summers Mrs. Howell and daughters have spent the Summer season at Gould Island, a few miles up the bay from Newport.

Mrs. Sidney C. Love (Marjorie Burnes) who has begun divorce proceedings against her husband, Sidney C. Love of Chicago and Seattle, is well known in Newport, where the couple have been much entertained by the "Reggie" Vanderbilts at Sandy Point Farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont of Newport and Washington, sailed for Europe Thursday, to spend the early Summer in England. In August they will go to Hungary, where they have taken Prince Esterhazy's place for the stag shooting. They will return to Washington in November.

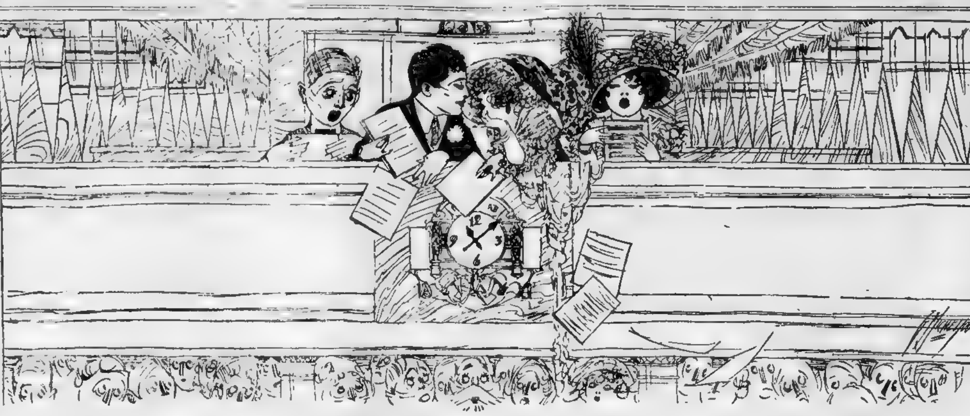
Mrs. Burke Roche plans to come on to Newport and open Elm Court villa by the first of June for a long season. She will have her sons, Maurice and Francis Roche, with her most of the time. A retinue of servants and a string of horses and carriages have already arrived at Elm Court.

Arrivals at Jamestown during the week, include Mrs. Henry L. Eustis and Miss Sadie E. Eustis of Cambridge, Rear Admiral and Mrs. E. C. Logan of Washington; Carl Dodge of Philadelphia to visit Mrs. M. A. Kern on Shoreby Hill, Mrs. William E. Wimerding at the Grey Lodge Tea House after traveling all Winter in Europe, Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Spears at Beckham Cottage on Wolcott avenue, Mr. and Mrs. James Dodge.

Returning for Season.

Arrivals during the week for the Summer comprise Miss Mary Turner from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from a visit to her sister; Edward C. Knight, Jr., at Claradon Court; Miss Georgianna G. King at Clover Patch; Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster, Miss Lucile R. Edgar at Edgar House, Miss Caroline Ogden Jones at Mid-Cliff, Mrs. W. Fitzhugh Whitehouse of Thornton Hall, Stony Stratford, England, at Eastbridge; Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hoffman of Cazenovia, N. Y., at Armsea Hall; Henry Clews, Jr., at The Rocks, where he will continue his studio work in oil painting as well as model work; Miss Jane Yardley and her sister, Mrs. Frank Marble, on Rhode Island avenue; James Vose Parker at Sans Souci villa, Mrs. William F. Fullam at the Leiber cottage, Rhode Island avenue; Mrs. Julia H. Eldridge on Ochre Point, Dr. and Mrs. John J. Mason at Wabun villa, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Histed on Ocean avenue, from Palm Beach; Mrs. David King at Muenchinger-King cottage, Samuel F. Barger, Miss Edna Barger, Mrs. Barger-Wallach, Mr. and Mrs. Milton S. Barger and Miss Jeanne Barger at the Edna villa.

THE WONDER GIRL AND JACK "SING" IN THE CHOIR



Four voices in the choir loft.
One stopped quite suddenly;
An eye glanced sidewise; some one coughed—
And then there were but three.

Three voices singing high and clear,
As voices ought to do,
The glance was caught, it would appear,
For soon there were but two.

Two voices—but THEIR owners queer
(Thank goodness!) weren't in love.
And so subtraction stops right here;
The score stands as above.

The congregation in amaze
Observed the silent pair.
They had a most harmonious gaze,
But not a sound was there.

In church! Oh, Wonder Girl and Jack!
That's going a bit far—
To turn to matters cardiac
Where all things solemn are.

Oblivious of everything—
The pastor's startled stare,
The organ's rhythmic thundering—
THEY didn't seem to care.

"The eye hath music," it is said,
But it is hardly such
As will inspire folk or aid
The offertory much.

Jack's MOST to blame, one must infer;
HIS fault is truly grim;
HIS eyes sing naught at all but Her;
While HERS—THEY sing a Him.

CHESTER FIRKINS.

The boys' club of Christ Church will give their annual dramatics Thursday evening in the vestry of the church.

A Colonial party will be given May 20 by the Balgall Phillips Chapter, D. A. R.

Frequent meetings of the July Fourth celebration committee will be held from now on. President Eugene R. Stone and his corps of assistance are planning to make the celebration this year the best ever held on the South Shore. The City Council has appropriated $1,000 to be used for this purpose and a public subscription will be held to raise the balance of the money needed.

Mrs. W. Franklin Dean of West Elm street left Saturday for a two weeks' visit at her Summer home at Monument Beach.

LOWER CAR STEPS, DEMAND OF WOMEN

Their Club in Brockton Also Wants Better Service on Old Colony.

NEWS OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

Activities of Organizations in Boston and the Nearby Towns.

THE Brockton Woman's Club, through its board of directors, has voted to indorse the petition which is being framed by the Hyde Park Woman's Club to have steps on the cars of the Old Colony Street Railway Company lowered; also a petition to have sufficient cars so that unseemly crowding may be avoided. Mrs. Ottiely Field was chosen as chairman of the reception committee for the coming year, and Mrs. Henry L. Southworth was chosen chairman of the hospitality committee. Mrs. Fred J. Ripley was the choice for chairman of the household economics committee, and Mrs. Fred L. Brett was selected for the chairmanship of the library extension committee. The guest night for the waiting list and for the teachers of the city will be held October 31, the department meetings will be held the second and fourth Tuesdays and the regular meetings will be held the first and third Mondays. It was voted to pay $30 for expenses at the High School during the recent art exhibit. This is the bill that there was so much trouble about.

Mrs. Joseph Hewett was appointed chairman of the committee which will represent the Matronalia Club at the Brockton Hospital Ladies' Aid Association lawn party, and has selected the following ladies to assist her: Mrs. C. W. Bixby, Mrs. Anna Buck, Mrs. Ernest C. Lambert, Mrs. A. M. Brown, Mrs. John Stewart, Mrs. H. H. Chevigney, Mrs. Everett C. Willis, Mrs. A. Roger Perkins and Mrs. George E. Taber.

Mrs. W. H. Poole was elected president of the Ten Times One Club of Brockton at the annual meeting last week. Mrs. Ralph D. Poole, the retiring president, was presented with a gold scarf pin in appreciation of her work as leader of the big club. Other officers elected were: Mrs. F. M. Howard, first vice-president; Mrs. N. Mark Williams, second vice-president; Mrs. George B. Holland, treasurer; Mrs. W. E. Beale, recording secretary; Miss Etta M. Shean, corresponding secretary. This club has probably done more charitable work in a quiet way than any other organization in the city. The club will continue to investigate needy families and will help them, as in the past.

The Progressive Chatauqua Circle of Brockton was entertained last week at the home of Mrs. J. C. Tannatt of Weston street. The study of "Mental Growth and Control" was continued. The Circle is planning a cottage party at Monument Beach, June 7, when Mrs. E. W. Gardner will be hostess for the members. Those who took prominent part in the meeting were: Mrs. J. W. Dennison, Mrs. Walter Rapp, Mrs. J. C. Tannatt, Mrs. E. W. Gardner, Mrs. Arthur L. Waterman, Mrs. Alfred H. Wilbur, Mrs. Calvin R. Barrett, Mrs. D. S. Whittemore, Mrs. David B. Matthews and Mrs. Nathan Haywood.

The Charitable Tens Circle of the King's Daughters of Quincy will be held to-morrow afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frank L. Davis, No. 23 Elm street, Quincy. The meeting will be the last before the Summer recess.

At the annual meeting of the Quincy Women's Club the annual reports of the standing committees were made and the following officers were elected: president, Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard; first vice-president, Mrs. Wilson Marsh; second vice-president, Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham; recording secretary, Miss Edith Randall; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Percy Holman; treasure, Mrs. Albert W. Pinkham; auditor, Mrs. Thomas Fenno; directors, Mrs. Albert E. Avery, Miss Alice G. Coe, Mrs. Albert M. Parker, Mrs. Edward E. Jameson and Mrs. Edward S. Tenney.

Mrs. Walter F. Jones of Wollaston park, Quincy, regent of Abigail Phillips Quincy Chapter, A. R., is to open her house for a colonial party to be given by the chapter on May 20 under the direction of Mrs. Seth Crocker of Quincy.

A unique society called the Friendly Aid Association of Braintree has been formed by the women of that town. The officers are president, Mrs. W. E. Dow; vice-president, Mrs. J. W. Watson; secretary, Mrs. A. W. Hoe; treasurer, Miss Leta Watson. The organizations represented in the new organization are: All Souls' Church, Mrs. W. E. Dow, Miss J. F. Edgecomb; First Congregational, Mrs. B. F. Wallis, Mrs. O. W. Allen; South Congregational, Mrs. J. W. Watson, Mrs. J. H. Kilbrith; Baptist, Mrs. A. W. Hoe, Mrs. J. F. Ellis; Episcopal, Mrs. W. T. Chase, Mrs. H. A. Rhoades, South Methodist, Mrs. W. W. Sylvester, Miss Leta Weston; East Methodist, Mrs. A. T. Johnson, Mrs. G. A. Remick; St. Francis, Mrs. C. A. Sullivan, Mrs. W. H. J. Fitzgerald, the Philergians, Mrs. W. F. Rogers, Mrs. F. E. Dyer, Overseers of the Poor, Mrs. Henry M. Storm.

A meeting of the Associate Charities of Quincy will be held next Tuesday at the Quincy Women's Club house.

Women prominent in the circles of the Newburyport Woman's Club are active in making preparations for the children's playgrounds. They are Dr. Abby Noyes Little, Miss Fannie C. Stone and Mrs. C. B. Bernheimer. The three are co-operating with a committee of the City Council.

Old Newbury Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, have elected the following officers for the coming year: Regent, Miss N. T. Morrison; vice-regent, Mrs. Charles Thurlow; recording secretary, Mrs. Frank Berdine; corresponding secretary, Mrs. William Lyall; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Noyes; registrar, Mrs. F. L. Atkinson; historian, Mrs. Adelma Arens; directors, Mrs. D. E. Hill, Mrs. A. P. Wilson, Mrs. J. E. Moody.

It is not expected that Mrs. Katherine Tingley, the national leader of Theosophist, will return to Laurel terrace, her Summer home, in Newburyport, before next month. She has passed the Winter in Point Loma, Cal., where the school of Theosophy is located. Her mansion on High street in this city was once the home of "Lord" Timothy Dexter, the eccentric and wealthy person, who lived here in the Revolutionary days.

ROXBURY GIRLS TO HAVE 'BABEL WALTZ'

Moonlight Dance Feature of Party by St. Patrick's Total Abstinence Society.

What promises to be a big event in Roxbury social circles is the party to be held under the auspices of St. Patrick's Total Abstinence and Literary Society in Navillus Hall, Bowdoin street, Dorchester, Wednesday evening.

A unique feature will be a moonlight dance, in which will appear a number of pretty girls with their escorts. At a signal from the leader of the orchestra the music will stop playing and the participants in the dance will be requested to swap partners and go through the intricacies of a "Babel" waltz, something new in the dance creation.

The young women connected with St. Patricia's Ladies' Total Abstinence Society have arranged for additional novelty dances, the nature of which they are keeping to themselves, and are working hard for the success of the affair, the proceeds of which will go toward the fund for the maintenance of the organization.

St. Patrick's Society is one of the largest connected with the Boston Catholic Total Abstinence Union, and since its formation in 1889 by the late Edmund Phelan and Cornelius J. Crowley has been a potent factor in shaping the minds of the young men of the Mount Pleasant section of Roxbury in leading sober and industrious lives.

A special meeting of the members will be held in the rooms No. 431 Dudley street, Roxbury, at which final reports will be made by the various sub-committees and definite action will be taken thereon.

The general committee in charge comprises Thomas Keane, Thomas Fitzpatrick, Cornelius J. Crowley, Robert Strain, John J. Cunniff, John F. Cahill, Thomas F. Phelan, Patrick H. Gallagher, Patrick D. Walsh, Annie C. Graves, Gertrude Bell, Agnes Smith and Mary O'Connell.

THOUSANDS TO JOIN IN K. OF C. OUTING

Good Program of Sports Arranged for June 17 Picnic at Canobie Lake Park.

The great outing and basket party of the Knights of Columbus and their friends at Canobie Lake Park on June 17, Bunker Hill Day, is arousing much enthusiasm. It is expected several thousand persons will attend. Already Grand Knights from the following councils have accepted invitations to attend.

Allston, Arlington, Back Bay, Belmont, Boston, Brighton, Brookline, Bunker Hill, Cambridge, Chelsea, Dorchester, Elm Hill, Everett, Fitton, Franklin, Jamaica Plain, James E. Hayes, Lexington, Malden, Mattapan, Medford, Mount Bowdoin, Mount Benedict, Mount Pleasant, Mount Vernon, Newton, North End, North Cambridge, Ozanam, Watertown, Pere Marquette, Rose Croix, Roxbury, St. James, St. John's, Shawmut, Somerville, South Boston, Waltham and Winchester.

The committee has obtained the exclusive use of the theatre for that day, where it will give an entertainment, each council contributing one number to be selected from the best amateur talent in Greater Boston. Under the leadership of Dominick F. Keegan an excellent program is being arranged.

The committee has also secured the exclusive use of the ball field, and ball games between teams of the various councils will be played during the afternoon. Athletics of every description combined with other forms of outdoor amusement will be held under the leadership of Charles F. J. McCue of Cambridge, chairman of the athletic committee. M. J. Finnigan of Allston, champion of the K. of C. Bowling League of 1910, will have charge of the bowling.

In a grove of thirteen acres ice cream and coffee will be served.

There will be dancing all day. Boats and launches can be hired to make trips around the lake. Canobie Lake is three miles long.

The outing is exclusively for Knights of Columbus and their friends. Tickets may be obtained from the Grand Knights of the councils represented on the committee.

Elaborate Preparations Are Being Made for the Great Charity Convention in June, Held in This City for the First Time; Important Papers to Be Read and Significant Work to Be Taken Up.

CHARITY workers prominent in this most worthy work in this country will attend the national conference of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul which will be held in Boston June 4, 5, 6 and 7. It is the first time in the history of the organization that Boston has been selected as the place for this national conference. Elaborate preparations are being made by Boston and New England members of St. Vincent de Paul societies to entertain the guests and delegates.

Some of the most prominent women charity and social workers of the city met Friday at the St. Vincent de Paul Society's room at No. 43 Hawkins street and arranged to entertain the wives and daughters of delegates and the delegates themselves during their stay in Boston. A committee was elected to make complete arrangements and plans so that nothing be left undone to make the visit of the delegates with their families and friends pleasant. During the convention the women have engaged Chipman Hall in Tremont Temple as a special meeting place for the ladies.

The meetings of the ladies will be in charge of the Rt. Rev. Mgr. D. J. McMahon, No. 237 East Twenty-first street, New York city, director and supervisor of Catholic Charities of that city and spiritual director of the Particular Council of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul of New York city.

Women Aid Great Work.

The general purpose of meetings of women at the national conference is closer co-operation in work of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul and to discuss plans for perfecting and perhaps enlarging the scope of that kind of charitable and spiritual work that can best be done by women, always, however, in conjunction or under the supervision of the society.

The ladies who have charge of the arrangements for the part that women will take in the National Conference are: Miss Josephine Bleakie, president of the Cecilian Guild, No. 93 Perry street, Brookline; Mrs. M. M. Cunniff, president of the Guild of the Infant Savior, No. 1,132 Beacon street, Brookline; Miss Maud R. Kwei, president of the Guild of St. Elizabeth, No. 59 East Springfield street; Mrs. W. McCarthy, president of the Ladies' Catholic Club, No. 1472 Washington street; Miss M. M'Glyn, president of the St. Katherine's Guild, No. 11 Mayfair street, Roxbury; Mrs. McCormick, president of St. Clare's Guild, Boylston and Brighton road; Mrs. James Dwight, president of the League of Catholic Women, No. 225 Beacon street; Mrs. George J. Jennett, No. 15 Elko street, Brighton; Mrs. Henry S. Rowan, No. 30 Leicester street, Brighton; Mrs. Fred Cross, Harriett street, Boston, of the Brighton Ladies' Charitable Union, and representatives selected from the Catholic Charity Bureau, the Columbus Day Nursery of South Boston and the Guild of St. Radegunde of Boston College.

Committees Hard at Work.

The various committees in charge of the arrangements of the National Conference are steadily perfecting their plans. They are holding meetings frequently, and the different reports already made indicate that nothing will be left undone to make the convention a success as far as the gentlemen in charge of it are concerned.

At the quarterly meeting of the Particular Council, the president, David F. Tilley, speaking of the coming conference, urged the large number of members present at the meeting to endeavor to attend all the sessions of the National Conference, and also ask the members of their respective conferences to attend as delegates. Mr. Tilley also said that each local conference would be asked to name two members to act as members of the general reception committee during the week of the conference in Boston.

Invitations to attend the National Conference have been sent to the Most Rev. Diomede Falconio, D. D. of Washington, D. C., apostolic delegate to the United States, and all the archbishops of the United States, fourteen in number. Invitations will also be sent to a large number of the clergy in the Boston archdiocese.

The five sessions of the National Conference will be held in Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple, while the headquarters of the delegates will be in the Hotel Bellevue, Beacon street, close by the hall where the meetings will be held.

Catholic Union Reception.

On Sunday afternoon, June 4, the Catholic Union of Boston will tender a reception to the visiting delegates and their friends. They will also be the guests of the city of Boston and their local brethren on an excursion down Boston harbor on Tuesday, June 6, which for many of the delegates, especially those from the Central West and other distant inland points, will be a unique experience. A visit will be made to the city's hospitals and correctional institutions on Deer Island, Rainsford Island and other islands in the harbor.

The Boston members of the executive committee, who have charge of the arrangements for the National Conference, have concluded arrangements for the big public meeting on Sunday evening, June 4. The committee has secured the Majestic Theatre for the meeting. The speakers will include Archbishop O'Connell, Governor Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald and the president of the National Conference of the society.

The Boston members of the executive committee are Dr. Thomas Dwight, David F. Tilley, Dr. John A. Horgan, Francis Burke, Dr. Thomas F. Leen and Bernard C. Kelley.

The sub-committee of Boston men has already received reports that a large number of members of the society from all parts of the country are coming to the conference, many of them on their first visit to Boston. It is planned to take these guests to Concord and Lexington, to Harvard College, to Plymouth and all of the other points of historic and educational interest about Greater Boston.

The committee has arranged so far for five business sessions of the conference. The first session will open at 9:30 a. m., Monday, June 5. The topic selected for this meeting is "Preventive Charity," which will be considered by two speakers, the chairman of the meeting, Thomas W. Hynes, president of the Particular Council of Brooklyn, N. Y., and John Rea, president of the Particular Council of Philadelphia.

"Administration of Councils and Conferences," is the topic for the evening session, of which Thomas N. Mulry, president of the Superior Council of New York City, will be chairman, and who will read the first paper. Edward A. Hall, president of the Central Council of Springfield, will speak on the same subject.

The opening session on June 6, of which Thomas C. Rapier, president of the Superior Council of New Orleans, will be chairman, will consider the topic of "Women's Auxiliaries," the speakers being Mr. Rapier and Robert Biggs, president of the Particular Council of Baltimore.

"Preservation of the Home."

The fourth meeting will be held in the evening, with J. L. Hornsby, president of the Superior Council of St. Louis, officiating as chairman. He will give a paper on "Preservation of the Home and the Care of Children." The second speaker will be J. H. Kohmescher, president of the Particular Council of Cincinnati.

On June 7, at 9:30 a. m., the final session of the conference will be held with Robert C. Gannon, president of the Superior Council of Chicago, as chairman. He will read a paper on "The Spiritual Side of the Society," and will be followed by Lawrence Gonner, president of the Particular Council of Dubuque.

It has been decided that the speakers selected for each session will confine their papers to periods of ten minutes each, after which the papers will be discussed by the delegates, each delegate to be limited to five minutes. This rule has been adopted so that as many delegates as possible may have an opportunity to participate in the discussion of the various topics.

It has also been decided to appoint a committee on resolutions, to prepare such resolutions as may be desired to submit for the consideration of the conference.

BUSY ON FETE FOR ST. MARY'S ASYLUM

Great activity is manifested among the members of the committees for the coming festival of St. Mary's Infant Asylum, to be held at Mechanics Building, on Saturday, June 3. Indications point to one of the most successful bazaars ever held. The tables will be in charge of representatives of the different parishes of Greater Boston, under whose auspices several social affairs are being held to create funds for the tables.

The bazaar will be under the direction of the Ladies' Aid Society.

The various tables will be represented as follows: St. Catherine's, Charlestown, Mrs. J. Trumbull; St. John's, Roxbury, Mrs. Thomas O'Toole; St. Philip's, Roxbury, Mrs. M. Cousins; Brookline parishes, Miss Marion O'Brien; St. Catherine's, Somerville, Mrs. Edward O'Neil, Sr.; Jamaica Plain parishes, Mrs. T. Lennon; St. Patrick's, Roxbury, Mrs. K. These women are only a few of thousands of living witnesses of the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases. Not one of these women ever received compensation in any form for the use of their names in this advertisement—but are willing that we should refer to them because of the good they may do other suffering women to prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a reliable and honest medicine, and that the statements made in our advertisements regarding its merit are the truth and nothing but the truth.

Health and Beauty Notes

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

Edith: No, I do not believe in "dry shampoos." If you were going to wash your face, would you even think of rubbing powder on it? When you need a shampoo ask your hairdresser for a canthrox shampoo or buy the canthrox at any drug store and prepare the shampoo at home by dissolving a teaspoonful of canthrox in a cup of hot water. The cleansing lather of this shampoo will remove the excess oil and all dirt and dandruff from the scalp pores. Your hair will rinse easily and dry quickly. This is the most beneficial shampoo I have ever used. It is very refreshing to an itching scalp and makes the hair very soft, silky and so fluffy there will seem to be twice as much of it. You will find nothing better than this shampoo for promoting a clean, healthy condition of the hair and scalp. It is not expensive and will not cause the hair to become dull and streaky like soap shampoos do.

W. M.: Your dull, weak, expressionless eyes can be made clear, beautiful and sparkling by putting in each eye twice daily a few drops of a simple tonic made by dissolving an ounce of crystos in a pint of cold water. This inexpensive tonic is very soothing and strengthening to weak, tired or inflamed eyes. Oculists find it excellent for treating granulated lids and eye troubles generally. Its strengthening properties make it a great aid to those who wear glasses.

Mrs. G. K.: You may be able to reduce your weight simply by exercising and dieting, but you can easily hasten the reduction with the following. Dissolve four ounces of parnotis in one and one-half pints hot water, when cold strain out the sediment; take a tablespoonful of the liquid before each meal and you will find it a splendid dissolver of fatty tissues that will not yield to other remedies. It is harmless, inexpensive and has restored many to their former slender figures and given sure relief from the burden of being too fat.

M. R. C.: A good, inexpensive lotion to take away that shiny, oily, sallow look to your complexion can be prepared at small cost as follows: Dissolve four ounces of spurmax in one-half pint hot water; when cool add two teaspoonfuls glycerine and apply to the skin, rubbing gently until dry. This will whiten and beautify your skin without leaving that powdered look. You will find this lotion far better than powder, as it not only gives your face a fresh, youthful tint, but does not rub off or show like powder. I find it excellent for preventing and removing freckles, skin pimples and as a protection to the skin from the sun and wind. Do not use powder on your face if you want your complexion to remain smooth and free from that muddy look.

Martha: If you have any fears of becoming bald, now is the time to save your hair. By getting one-half pint alcohol and one ounce quinzoin at your druggist's and mixing with one-half pint cold water you will have the finest remedy imaginable for dandruff and falling, lifeless hair. Rub this tonic into the scalp twice a week and you will soon see a wonderful improvement in your hair. It will take on a healthy color and become glossy and abundant. This tonic is not sticky and will instantly relieve scalp itching. I know of many hairdressers who use this tonic exclusively and with fine results. It is equally good for both light and dark hair.

Mrs. C. K.: For that tired, wornout feeling you need a good tonic to build up your strength, energy and appetite, and remove from your blood those impurities which cause pimples, sallowness and other skin troubles. You can prepare at home an inexpensive, beneficial tonic as follows: Dissolve one-half cup sugar and one ounce kardene in one-half pint alcohol, then add hot water to make a full quart. Take a tablespoonful before each meal. I cannot recommend this tonic too highly as a reliable Spring medicine. It will give you new life and ambition and turn your pimply, sallow complexion into a new, fresh one. For stimulating the organs of the body to normal action you will find this simple, old-fashioned tonic just grand.

Mrs. N. C.: Even at your age of 40 there can be no good excuse for your complexion not looking just as smooth, fresh and plump as it did 15 years ago. I want you to try a cream-jelly that I have found very fine for clearing up a dark, rough, wrinkled skin. You can make it yourself by dissolving an ounce of almozoin in one-half pint cold water, then add two teaspoonfuls glycerine, stir and let stand over night before using. Apply this to your face and you will soon find those large, dirt-collecting pores smaller, your blackheads and wrinkles gone and your complexion smooth and clear. As a skin beautifier I have never seen its equal and I know you will like it.

Betty: A simple paste made with powdered delatone and water will rid your face of those unsightly hairs. Get an ounce of delatone from the druggist and with a little water mix some to form a paste, then spread on hairy surface, and after remaining two or three minutes rub off and wash the skin. Delatone costs a dollar an ounce, but it does the work quickly.

May: Faded blonde hair can be restored to its former gloss and brilliancy if you shampoo thoroughly and dry, and then wash with marlax tea, rinse again and dry. You will find marlax quite harmless, but it soon changes streaky, faded blonde hair to its former rich shade and softness.

SOCIAL NOTES OF THE WEEK

Riverbank Court was the scene of a fashionable gathering last evening when a coterie of the season's popular debutantes entertained a large party of their friends. The hostesses were the Misses Mary and Julia Fitzpatrick, Mary and Alice McCormick, Alice Brummitt, Mary Montgomery, Mary and Julia Gregory, Katherine and Lena Mahoney, Mathild and Molly O'Hearn and Bessie Ewing. During the Winter the girls have formed a social and sewing club, which met fortnightly at the members' homes. The dancing party was complimentary to their friends. The matrons were Mrs. M. J. O'Hearn, Mrs. Edward J. Gregory and Mrs. Frank Ewing.

Arrangements are under way for the annual lawn and garden fete to be held on the grounds of the Daly Industrial School, Train street, Dorchester, in aid of that institution on July 1. Mrs. Richard Lynch, president of the Young Ladies' Charitable Aid Society, is in charge of the ladies' committee, who are working on the party. The Daly Industrial Club, composed principally of the members of the Urbane Pleasure Club of Neponset, is also working for the party's success.

Miss Isabel Doherty of Mayfield street, Dorchester, was the hostess of the C. L. Bridge Whist Club during the week. The club is composed of residents of the Savin Hill district. Throughout the Winter they have held weekly parties for social diversion. Among those present were Mrs. Francis Rice, Miss Florence Rice, Mrs. John Sheehan, the Misses Margaret and Mary Hatch, Miss Francis Temple, Miss Mary Roach, Mrs. Frank Collerton, Miss Alice Collerton and Mrs. Charles Nixon.

Among the Summer residents who will open their cottages during the week are Mr. and Mrs. Bert Dooley of Brighton. Their cottage, "Elko Villa," is the rendezvous of their numerous friends throughout the Summer, in whose honor many hospitalities are being planned. They will be joined by Mr. and Mrs. George Jennette, the latter Mrs. Dooley's sister, later in the week.

A merry party will gather at Catholic Union Hall on Tuesday evening, May 23, to attend the annual reunion of the Gilmanton, N. H., vacationists. Each year the Summer tourist, gather to renew old friendships and make plans for the coming season. The party is expected to be one of the largest the association has ever held.

St. Margaret's parish will be represented at the festival to be held in Mechanics Hall, June 3, by a large table booth, in charge of the Blue Bell Club. The North Dorchester women in charge will be Mrs. Timothy Keilard, president, assisted by Mrs. Norton, vice president, and Miss Drislane, secretary.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Anna V. King of South Boston to Timothy J. Toomey of Cambridge. Miss King is prominently connected with the church and social affairs of St. Vincent's parish. Mr. Toomey is connected with the Postoffice Department.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Edward Sheehan of Dorchester with their family, will leave early next month for their Summer residence, "Beaver Cottage," Hempton Hill, Nantasket. Many hospitalities are being planned for their friends throughout the season.

Among the early June weddings of interest is that of Miss Margaret J. Powers of South Boston to John P. Keating of Cambridge. Miss Powers will be attended by her sisters, the Misses Katherine and Gertrude Powers.

Miss Holly Fitzgerald of Brighton has accepted the position of organist and choir director of the new church at Newton Upper Falls, St. Mary's, of which the Rev. T. J. Danby is the pastor.

Miss Cecilia Gleason of St. Matthew's parish, Stanton street, Dorchester, has been appointed organist of the church, succeeding Mrs. Margaret Higgins, who has moved from the parish. Miss Gleason is perfecting a large choir of mixed voices.

MISS MARGARET O'NEIL.

MISS MARGARET R. SULLIVAN.

Bunker Hill Council, K. of C., Will Give a Show on Monday Evening, May 29.

IN aid of the Charlestown Day Nursery, one of the newest of Boston's infant aid organizations, the Bunker Hill Council, Knights of Columbus, will present the musical comedy, "The Incognito" on Monday evening, May 29.

The performance will be given in St. Mary's Theatre, Cooper street, Boston. A substantial financial return is expected, not only from the inviting nature of the entertainment, but also from the very worthy cause for which this enterprise is planned.

The cause of suffering children appeals to everyone. The new Charlestown Day Nursery has passed through the organization and location stages and is now seeking funds for additional equipment and for maintenance.

Women Elect Officers.

A few weeks ago a number of Charlestown women, representing the three Catholic churches in that part of the city formed the Guild of the Holy Child, with the object of establishing a day nursery in Charlestown. They elected the following officers: Miss Mary Morris, president; Mrs. Francis Maloney, vice-president; Mrs. Owen McManus, treasurer; Mrs. Joseph Teaffe, secretary.

In their efforts they found ready sympathy in Bunker Hill Council, Knights of Columbus, the largest council in the State and the seventh in size in the country. Bunker Hill Council promptly gave the use of its dining room and two adjoining rooms at its council building in Monument avenue. These three rooms will be used by the nursery during the day time. In addition, the nursery will have the use of a broad verandah and of the grounds connected with the building. The grounds will provide location for tents and for sand-gardens, indispensable in the out-door care of infants during the heated term.

The Guild of the Holy Child, from funds already in hand, has contracted for the first supply of beds and for some other equipment. It needs toys, discarded clothing, high chairs, supplies of crackers and milk and other accessories necessary to a day nursery. Any donations of cash, clothing or food may be sent to Miss Mary Morris, care of Bunker Hill Council, Knights of Columbus.

Aid for Day Nursery.

This presentation of "The Incognito" by members of Bunker Hill Council and their friends is part of the council's plans to aid the day nursery.

This musical comedy is a two-act production, words and music by Leon Dadmun, known as a talented composer and lyricist. Mr. Dadmun will direct the performance on May 29.

The cast of "The Incognito" will include:

Comedy "Incognito" to Be Put on the Stage Late This Month.

There will be no end of pretty girls in the company, costumed in brilliant attire. Some of the chorus groups will include Summer girls, yachting girls, show girls, tennis girls, Oriental girls, Brazilian girls, military girls and Japanese girls.

Those in the Chorus.

Among these girls will be such talented ones as Misses Margaret O'Neil, Margaret R. Sullivan, Margaret Curry, Margaret Finn, Agnes Finn, Louise McCarthy, Lillian Gaffney, Mollie Collins, Emily Finn, Celia Thompson, Mary Finn, Josephine McGrath, Helen Neary, Bessie Perry, Lillie Baker, Jennie Maloney, May Maloney, Annie Logue, Mona Maher, Edith Ford, Catherine Maloney, Etta Maloney, Margaret Buchanan, Annie Coughlin, Mary Regan, Bessie Steele, Catherine Monahan, Ruth Costello and many others.

A double sextette will be one of the features. The score written by Mr. Dadmun provides for many songs, both solo and chorus, with topical numbers for local application.

The committee of arrangements from Bunker Hill Council includes Arthur C. Moran, chairman; John P. Green, secretary; Charles F. Ford, treasurer; Timothy F. Murphy, Joseph A. McLaughlin, James F. Rogers, Thomas H. Rorke, Howard V. Redgate, Robert C. Fitzgerald, James J. Fleming, James J. Crowley, William Ford, Charles J. Harvey, John J. Leary, Thomas Kiley, Francis M. Ducey, Frank S. Robinson, James J. Corbett, Dr. Joseph M. Blagdon, John H. Perkins, Thomas Melville.

A. O. H. REPORT SHOWS SUFFOLK PROSPEROUS

What Is Going On Among the Divisions in the Greater Boston District.

Organizer George H. Sheehan has just completed a tour through western Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont where he addressed several open meetings. Increase are looked for in the above sections as a result of Mr. Sheehan's visits. Lewiston Hibernians will have an open meeting on Tuesday evening at which T. J. Driscoll will preside. Officers and members from all of the divisions in Androscoggin County will attend. State President Robinson, at whose solicitation Mr. Sheehan makes this visit, is confidently looking forward to an increase of fifty per cent. in membership before the expiration of his term.

A mass meeting of the directors, stockholders and friends of the Boston Highlands Hibernian Building Association will be held in International Hall, No. 67 Warren street, Roxbury, on Sunday afternoon, May 28. Mayor Fitzgerald, Congressman James M. Curley, State President John H. Dillon, County President Richard Dwyer, former Senator Thomas H. Dowd and Representative James T. Kenney will address the meeting. Patrick J. Larkin, president of the association, will submit the plans for the handsome new building and club house to be erected on Dudley street.

The newly organized Suffolk County Degree Corps will confer the several major degrees on a large class of candidates at St. Rose Hall next Sunday afternoon. The candidates are members of Division 60, the Nightworkers. This exemplification of the new ritual will be the initial appearance of the Suffolk staff. County President Richard Dwyer will act as Ard Ree, William T. Fleming, Ollav; Fred J. McLaughlin, Bard; Thomas J. McMackin, Brehan, and Cornelius J. Coughlin, chief of escorts. President John J. Conway of Division 60 will act as toastmaster of the entertainment to follow the degree work.

The next County Board meeting to be held on Sunday afternoon, June 25, in Emmet Hall, Jamaica Plain, will be an important one. The committee that will make final arrangements for the field day at Locust street grounds on Labor Day will be appointed at this meeting. The [illegible] County [illegible] event has helped Mr. Dwyer do away with the assessing of the members and has been of great assistance in building up the county treasury fund.

As soon as final arrangements can be made with the present tenants on the land owned by the Boston Highlands Hibernian Building Association near the Dudley street terminal, ground will be broken for the handsome new temple to be erected to accommodate the large number of Irish organizations in that district. Plans specify four stores, four lodge rooms, and a large banquet hall, with spacious dancing and entertainment halls equipped with all of the modern devices and conveniences.

Championship football and hurling will be on the program at Locust Street Grounds on July 4. The committee on sports arranging for the field day of Division 72 of Suffolk have signed up several of the best teams [illegible] Another feature [illegible] hornpipes and reels will [illegible] prize winners from every county in Ireland.

Advance reports submitted by County President Richard Dwyer of Suffolk show that this district is in excellent condition. There is a large sinking fund in most of the divisions, and the net gain in membership has been large, particularly during the past two years. The members are now taking up the building question and it is probable that an A. O. H. temple will be erected in every district in Suffolk during the next two years.

Division 6, 7, 13, 32, 36, 57, 58, 70 and 75 of South Boston will meet at Hibernian Hall, E street, South Boston, at 7.15 this morning and proceed in a body to St. Eulalie's Church to receive Holy Communion. Rev. Mortimer Toomey will deliver the sermon. County President Richard Dwyer will act as marshal and will be assisted by County Secretary William T. Fleming.

The three halls in the Browne Building, Malden, were not large enough to accommodate the guests that were present Friday evening to enjoy the annual May party and musicale of Auxiliary 37 of Malden. County President Mrs. Jennie Gavin of Watertown was present, accompanied by her staff.

Norfolk, Essex, Plymouth, Middlesex and Worcester counties will show big increases according to County Presidents Slattery, Ahearn, Shanahan, Harold and Cannon. There is a friendly rivalry as to which county will report the largest net increase to State President John H. Dillon when the State convention is held in 1912.

National President James J. Regan of St. Paul stated in a speech delivered at Denver that Massachusetts was in excellent condition and he "hoped every State would follow the old Bay State in all departments, as the membership included some of the most influential men in the East."

Division 17 of Suffolk added four new members at the meeting in Deacon Hall. President Martin J. Smith is making arrangements to have the new Suffolk County degree corps officiate at a major degree meeting on a large number of candidates in the near future.

All arrangements have been made by Division 24 of Boston for the annual reunion and ball to be held in Corinthian hall, Deacon building, on Monday evening, May 29. Military men are requested by Colonel John O'Leary, president of the division, to appear in uniform.

The committee having charge of the recent whist and dancing party of the ladies auxiliary in Ashland is receiving congratulations on the success achieved. The sick and death benefit fund will receive a handsome addition.

President Thomas J. McMackin of Division 69, of the North End, is making arrangements for a monster class initiation at the next meeting. A fine musical program will be given after the degree work.

A social hour was given by the members of Auxiliary 18 of Neponset, when the first meeting was held in the new quarters. Miss Nellie Driscoll, president of the auxiliary, acted as toastmaster.

Representative John T. Flanagan, president of Division 3, Worcester, will prepare a series of entertainments to be given after the business meeting. A number of the best speakers in the State will be heard according to present plans.

Preliminary arrangements are being made by Division 11 of East Dedham for the annual picnic and field day at Oakland grove Labor Day.

Divisions 1 and 2 of Lewiston, Me., will receive Holy Communion in a body this morning at St. Patrick's Church.

Confer K. of C. First Degree.

South Boston Council No. 78, Knights of Columbus, will meet this afternoon at its rooms. The first degree will be conferred on a large class of candidates.

A social meeting was held by the Roscommon Ladies' Association at 8 Warren street, on Wednesday evening, and plans were made for a series of [illegible] and entertainments during the Fall and Winter season. [illegible] will be one of the largest in [illegible] as the members are indefatigable workers. Mrs. B. A. Hughes presided and selections were given by Miss Mary E. McDermott, Miss [illegible], Miss [illegible], Mrs. Mary [illegible], Mrs. Mabel Cook, Mrs. James F. Kenny, Miss Mary A. Burns, Miss [illegible], Miss Eliza Kelly and Miss [illegible] McDon[illegible].

Former Senator Thomas H. Dowd and Ex-Representative Thomas Riley of Malden will be the principal speakers at the smoke talk to be held in Red Men's Hall, Dwight and Tremont streets, on the evening of May 30. A fine musical program will be given in addition. William J. Fitzpatrick will act as toastmaster. The net proceeds will go to the fund being raised by the Kilkenny Men's Association, to erect a memorial to the late James Carroll who was a charter member of the club.

Resolutions of condolence were adopted by the Kilkenny Men's Association and extended to [illegible] William B. Walsh on the death of his estimable mother, Mrs. Thomas Edmund Walsh, at Grange Moon Rayne, Kilkenny, Ireland, and to Patrick J. Cantwell, past treasurer, on the death of his niece, Miss Annie Cantwell of Brookline. Copies were ordered sent to the families, the press of Waterford and Kilkenny and the AMERICAN.

The Central Council will meet in Dever Hall, Paine building, next Tuesday evening. The dates reserved for outings, excursions and field days by the several clubs will be announced so that there will be no confliction. President Peter A. Conroy has a number of important announcements to make to the delegates and he requests the attendance of the representatives of all clubs to report at 8 o'clock sharp.

With the large number of candidates recently added to the roll of the Cavan Club new quarters to accommodate had to be procured, and the club will meet in the future at Friendship Hall, 12 Kneeland street, on the first Wednesday and third Sunday evenings. A whist and dancing party will be given at Wells Memorial Hall on Thursday evening, May 18. The party will be a reunion of Cavan people from all parts of Greater Boston.

All former residents of Roscommon now in this vicinity desirous to become members of the Roscommon [illegible] are notified to be present at No. 67 Warren street next Sunday afternoon when the club will hold a meeting to initiate a large class of candidates. Thomas J. Finnegan will preside.

Miss Mary Reynolds of Roseville square, well known in Catholic social circles, has been holding a number of entertainments at her home and is planning for an outing in one of the suburbs for the near future. She is a graduate of St. Mary's High School and the Berkeley street academy. This young woman is a member of many organizations connected with St. Mary's Church.

Members of Division 7, Ancient Order of Hibernians, will hold a real Irish night in Castle Hall, Monday evening, May 29. Invitations have been extended to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston. One of the features of the evening will be the bagpipe selections by John T. Tansey of Boston. Philip Sherry is chairman of the committee in charge.

The Clementine Associates, a well-known West Lynn organization of Catholic young women, will install these officers Wednesday evening: President, Miss May Dempsey; vice president, Miss Mary Slattery; treasurer, Miss Helen Eagan; auditor, Miss Margaret McCarthy.

Grand Knight John Harney of Valladolid Council, K. of C., of Lynn, is arranging for a series of entertainments and socials for the members during the Summer season. Since assuming the office, Attorney Harney has conducted a number of socials for the members.

DYING THEATRICAL YEAR SHOWS SIGNS OF RENEWING LIFE FOR BRIEF PERIOD

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

THEY'RE off on a fresh start. The dying theatrical season is not quite so dead as your inclination might lead you to believe, and to-morrow renewed hope will fill the box offices of two downtown theatres that are making a brave attempt to emerge from a doubtful regular season into a few weeks of Summertime prosperity with entertainment designed to catch the seeker after mild amusement.

With "A Country Girl" at the Tremont and "Judy O'Hara" at the Hollis, there will appear a moderate variety of new entertainment. Experience of the past few seasons does not give much hope for a Summer of riotous business at the theatres, but theatrical men are always courageous where promoters in other lines of endeavor are timid, and unexpected plums are thereby sometimes picked by the men who take the long chance. And that is about all that any manager can hope for when the temperature gets to soaring.

There will also be serious competition for the first-class houses this Summer, inasmuch as two lively stock organizations will remain in the field. Lindsay Morison will find a house full of people at the Majestic to-morrow evening when he resumes his acquaintance with Boston as a stock manager. With an attraction like "The Girl of the Golden West," there should be no doubt of the success of his opening week, and as he promises many more that are just as appealing, it is certain that he will become an emphatic factor in the struggle for theatrical supremacy.

John Craig, too, will have his hands on the reins at the Castle Square Theatre, and with "The White Sister," which opens to-morrow, Boston will have its first popular priced glimpse at Viola Allen's successful play. Mr. Craig's Summer season will be a mixture of comedy and musical farce, which he feels is just the kind of entertainment that fits a rising mercury.

The race between Mr. Craig and Mr. Morison promises to be extremely interesting, and from the viewpoint of the public it should be beneficial.

IF the Shuberts have their own way about it—and the signs are encouraging—there will be no darkness at the Shubert Theatre worth mentioning until very late in the season. It is now announced that "The Kiss Waltz" will be given its first metropolitan performances at the Shubert, beginning next Saturday evening. This will make the third big production that the Shuberts have launched in Boston this season, and if playgoers show any inclination to even modestly support a good musical show when the sea breezes begin to beckon folk shoreward, "The Kiss Waltz" will remain. It was originally intended to make this the annual Summer production at the Casino Theatre in New York, but the success of "The Balkan Princess" forced the Shuberts into new arrangements, by which Boston will get the first glimpse of the play.

"The Kiss Waltz" was known as "The Love Waltz" during its long run in Vienna, but on account of copyright laws the title was changed in this country.

MR. CRAIG has scored again—this time with "The Merchant of Venice," which, it will be recalled by many of his admirers, was given at the Castle Square nine years ago, long before the turn of the wheel made him an actor-manager. With Miss Lillian Lawrence in the cast, the past week has been something of a joyful reunion for both, as Miss Lawrence played Portia to Mr. Craig's Shylock during the former engagement. "The Merchant of Venice" presents many genuine difficulties to a stock company, and it is to Mr. Craig's credit that his performances have moved so smoothly. It may again be recalled that Mr. Craig is sharing in the education of our young folk through his Shakespearean productions, evidence of which was found in the crowded matinees all through the week. In order to accommodate the school children who are studying Shakespeare the matinees at the Castle Square were begun forty-five minutes later than usual. In no better way could the real value of a strong stock organization to a community be demonstrated than by Mr. Craig's co-operation with the school children.

THE first of the local theatres to close its season is the Grand Opera House, which entered upon a period of Summer darkness last evening, when "The Sweetest Girl in Dixie" moved out. With the shutters up and the electric signs down, Manager George Walker Magee is expected to depart immediately for a selected spot on Cap Cod, where he thinks he will spend several weeks fishing.

IF Charles J. Ross has his own way, and it looks now as if he would, he will be lost forever to the acting world. With a record of long service, dating far beyond the days of Weber and Fields, and moving smoothly to recent musical comedies, Mr. Ross has turned his back upon it all for the more alluring task, he says, of doctoring bad plays. He has a "comedy carpenter shop," where plays that need attention are promptly repaired—satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Mr. Ross believes that many novel plots go to waste because they lack expert tinkering, and that first aid to the injured often results in a cure. Alhough Mr. Ross's new calling is unique in the business of the theatre, he says that the signs are promising.

THE man who boosts business for "Judy O'Hara," which comes to the Hollis to-morrow, has been unusually active, with the result that already the New York newspapers have proclaimed that Mrs. R. Helen Langford, who is to appear in a minor role, is none other than Ruth Helen Lang, who sacrificed $50,000 to be a regular hope-to-die actress. It was an uncle who died and left Miss Lang $50,000, but there was a string on it, which pushed her out of the will unless she agreed to abstain from clinging to her craving for the stage. It appears that Miss Lang prefers to speak six lines in "Judy O'Hara" to the $50,000. Now, would you believe it?

MARY YOUNG (Mrs. John Craig) is gathering a few weeks' rest in New York—if such is possible. Miss Young's visits to New York, always designed for enjoyment and relief from the wearing toil of her work at the Castle Square Theatre, seldom bring the desired result, for most of her time when in the big town is spent in negotiating new plays for the Castle Square. If she follows her usual programme she will return to Boston with a pocket full of manuscripts.

THE end of the season at the Boston arrived last evening, but the house will be reopened in June for the big Friars' Festival, which will be in Boston for a single performance. Manager A. L. Levering will not remain for the Friars, but will sail shortly for London, where business interests and pleasure will occupy his time until the Fall.

Heard in the Greenroom

BESSIE WYNN, the little comedienne at B. F. Keith's Theatre, is a favorite with the boys at Princeton University. A few weeks ago Miss Wynn played Trenton, N. J., and on Tuesday evening the theatre was filled with her admirers from the nearby seat of learning. When Miss Wynn started to sing her famous "Oo, Oo," song one of the crowd hurriedly left his seat and hustled out of the theatre, returning shortly with a six-weeks kid-goat in his arms. The little animal was attired in a blanket of orange, upon which was inscribed, "You've got our goat," and ribbons of orange and black formed the "leash." Hurrying down the aisle, the Princeton man passed the goat over the footlights, amid shouts of laughter from the audience. Miss Wynn was for a moment taken back, but upon seeing the orange and black lead about the animal's neck, she picked it up, acknowledged her thanks, and led the newly acquired mascot off the stage. The goat spent the night in the animal room at the Trenton Theatre, with a half dozen trained seals. The next day it was placed in a crate and shipped to Miss Wynn's farm, located just outside of Columbus, O.

IT was in Detroit during a run of Marlowe and Sothern in Shakespearian plays that a number of society people who had constituted a box party at the theatre entered a prominent cafe and ordered supper. An actor, seated at an adjoining table, overheard the following conversation:

Society Woman No. 1—Well, I enjoyed that play immensely. I have always wanted to see 'Macbeth,' and now I have seen it.

Society Woman No. 2—I must say it was tiresome to me in some places. I found it so full of quotations.

ADMITTING that the life of an actress is not all sunshine, Elsie Janis is of the opinion that about the most distressing thing women of her profession have to contend with is the attention and comment they attract when they try to mingle with every-day people.

One day last week Miss Janis had occasion to do some shopping and, accompanied by her mother, entered one of the large department stores.

"We hadn't been in that store ten minutes," she was telling me, "before a crowd of women gathered around us and one of them, peering into my face, turned to her companion and said: 'Why, I think she is positively plain.'

"But that wasn't the worst of it. Before we got out I heard another woman say she would bet all she had I was more than 21. Of course, I am so accustomed to hearing unpleasant things said about me that I don't mind, then, too, I hear enough of the other kind to counterbalance.

"I was amused at my chauffeur that same afternoon. I was telling him of the experience I had just had and of the wager I had heard made. 'Why that's nothing,' he said. 'I won fifty dollars on the same bet yesterday and called up the Gerry Society to get the date of your birth.'"

IN a busy street, recently, a wagon loaded with theatrical paraphernalia belonging to the Aphie James company collided with a street car. A large box containing electric light globes was knocked to the street and many of the globes were smashed. Considerable sympathy was felt for the theatrical workman in charge as he gazed ruefully at the shattered fragments. A benevolent-looking gentleman eyed him compassionately.

"My good man," he said, "I suppose you will have to make good this loss out of your own pocket?"

"Yes," was the melancholy reply.

"Well, well," said the philanthropic gentleman, "hold out your hat—here's a dollar for you; and I dare say some of these other people will give you a helping hand, too."

The man held out his hat and several persons hastened to drop coins in it. At last, when the contributions had ceased, he emptied the contents of his hat into his pocket. Then, pointing to the retreating figure of the philanthropist who had started the collection, he observed:

"Say, maybe he ain't the wise guy! That's me boss!"

BILLS AT BOSTON THEATRES

Hollis Street Theatre.

The engagement of Aphie James and her own company will begin to-morrow night at the Hollis Street Theatre in the new play, "Judy O'Hara." "Judy O'Hara," by Frances Hodgson Burnett and Frederic Arthur Stanley, is spoken of as a romantic comedy drama during the early days of the seventeenth century in Ireland and England. Mrs. Burnett's and Mr. Stanley's writings are so original, truthful and yet imaginative that they cannot be weighed or judged by other standards. Being original they have served as a model for others. The play has been splendidly mounted and with an excellent cast, containing Paul McAllister, Lynn Pratt, Ann Warrington, Frank Kilday, Frank Currier, Alfred Moore, Frank Dekum, Julia Hanchett, Isabelle Lee, Gerome Edwards, Douglas Ross, Marcus Moriarty, Helen Lang and Caroline Oden, it gives promise of success.

Majestic Theatre.

The season of the Lindsay Morison Stock Company at the Majestic Theatre should be most auspiciously inaugurated to-morrow afternoon and evening, for not only is this organization a well-tried assembly of popular favorites, including Eleanor Gordon and Wilson Melrose, who won such popular favor last Summer during the Summer stock season of the Lindsay Morison company, but there has been chosen as the opening bill one of the greatest dramatic successes of several seasons in Boston at high prices, David Belasco's "The Girl of the Golden West." The production is an entirely new one, on the same elaborate and painstaking scenic detail that has characterized its presentations here previously, both as a drama and as a grand opera. Miss Gordon will be seen, of course, in the role of "the girl," and Mr. Melrose as Dick Johnson (Ramerez). At the opening Monday matinee and at all Monday matinees all patrons will receive a beautiful souvenir box of chocolate bon-bons.

Castle Square Theatre.

Dramatized from the novel of the same name by Marion Crawford, the production of "The White Sister," this week will be an event of importance at the Castle Square. Originally played by Viola Allen in the leading role, it gained a favor that brought it added renown, and it will find a large and interested public awaiting it during the coming week. Marion Crawford, one of the foremost American novelists of the era, was especially at home with Italian scenes and people, and "The White Sister" displays his skill to the utmost. It makes an effective drama, filled with life, incident and sensation, and its plot involves the experiences of Giovanna, who takes the vows of Catholic sisterhood, and of Severi, a soldier with whom she is in love. It is essentially an acting play, and Miss Binley's reappearance in the title role will give an added interest to Mr. Craig's production. Mr. Craig will act the part of Severi, the soldier-lover, with vigor and artistic insight.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

One of the most sensational novelties ever imported for the B. F. Keith circuit will be introduced in Boston this week. It is called "The Magic Kettle," with which the most extraordinary feats are performed, such as heating water without the aid of fire, burning ice and a number of other feats that are done in full view of the audience and all of which seem incredible. On the same bill next week will be Bessie Wynn, the songstress, who returns after a long absence touring the West. Still another attraction, one that will be seen here for the first time, will be Frank Milton and the De Long Sisters, in a musical comedy called "Twenty Minutes Layover at Alfalfa Junction." Agnes Scott and Harry Keane are also on the bill with a new sketch called "Drifting." There will be other attractive features.

Tremont Theatre.

A generation ago "A Country Girl" would have been called comic opera. The term "musical comedy" originated in England and apparently was the result of an effort to differentiate between the old-fashioned costume opera and the modern idea of light and sparkling comedy with music more or less related, usually less. But "A Country Girl" stands for what was originally meant by musical comedy in its best estate, a comedy with songs and ensembles suggested by and illuminating the text. Add to this the fact that the music was written by Lionel Monckton and the assurance that the piece is to be presented by the assembly of performers announced by the Gray-Stewart Co. for to-morrow at the Tremont Theatre, and the seeker after entertainment is entitled to feel pretty certain of finding it there. Most of the original New York cast are concerned in this engagement.

Shubert Theatre.

The Shuberts have selected their Shubert Theatre in Boston as the scene for the first American presentation of their newest musical comedy production, the new Viennese operetta "The Kiss Waltz," and the production will be made next Saturday night, May 20th. It was originally intended to give this most important musical production its first hearing at the Casino in New York City, and in fact the intention from the start to make this their most elaborate presentation of the season. "The Kiss Waltz" had its long and successful run in Vienna under the title of "The Love Waltz," but here, on account of the copyright laws the title has been changed. The score is by C. M. Ziehrer, who composed "Mlle. Mischief," and the American version is by Edgar Smith. Among the better known players of the big cast are Maud Lambert, Elsa Ryan, Edith Bradford, Edgar Atchison Ely, Charles Angelo, Van Rensselaer Wheeler, Eva Davenport and Charles Bigelow.

Grand Opera House.

Messrs. Stair & Wilbur and Magee have issued an announcement to their patrons regarding the twenty-fourth season at the Grand Opera House, which closed last night, and regarding their plans for next season, in which they say, "We closed for the Summer on Saturday evening, May 13, after a remarkably successful season of forty weeks. What renovations are needed in the auditorium and foyers will be made during the Summer months, and the theatre will re-open early in August with a big melodramatic production. Among the list of attractions already booked for next season are many old favorites besides many new big productions, and we are looking forward to one of the most successful seasons that the Grand Opera House has ever experienced."

Norumbega Park.

Nature is spreading its glorious mantle of Summer foliage and over over Norumbega Park, and the landscape gardeners, carpenters, decorators, mechanicians, electricians, and in fact all the workers who under the watchful and constant eye of Manager Carl Alberte bring Summer order out of Winter and Spring chaos have been hard at it for weeks to have everything in perfect readiness for the opening of the fifteenth season on Sunday, May 21st, when the public may flock by trolley and automobile to this garden amusement resort of America on the banks of the beautiful Charles to see what new delights and what improved attractions of former seasons are provided for their entertainment during the coming summer.

Park Theatre.

"The Commuters" is added to the list of Mayflowers in Boston, and it would look as if the June roses would still see the comedy of suburban life entertaining the masses at the Park Theatre. This house has had a number of long engagements in its recent history and the indications are that "The Commuters" will rank with the best of them. It is a play with so great universality of theme that it appeals to everybody in suburban circles or out of them, and that is why the interest is so great.

Globe Theatre.

There will be plenty of comedy in the Globe program this week. The Todeska Keating Trio of cyclists in some hair-raising and comic tricks, Bennie Pierce, the most unctuous of singing comedians; Musical Woeckeners, in an instrumental comedy skit; Earle and Bartlett, in their screaming comedy, "Mike's Call," will appear in the bill. The new pictures will be feature films each carefully selected from the best makes.

Orpheum Theatre.

There will be a complete change of bill at the Orpheum Theatre to-morrow, when a number of astonishing vaudeville specialties will be introduced for the first time to Boston audiences. Not only will the vaudeville programme show many new acts but the motion picture exhibit is planned to give real entertainment by reason of the carefully selected films that will be shown.

Howard Athenaeum.

There will be an entertaining athletic program at the Howard this week. The feature card will be Eddie Murphy of South Boston, hailed by the sporting fraternity as the coming lightweight champion of the world. "The Big Review" company, with Frankie Heath, will be the burlesque attraction.

Columbia Theatre.

"The Alcazar Beauties," headed by F. C. Thomas of the old time comedy team of Thomas and Watson, will present the comedy "A Senator for an Hour," full of slam bang fun, good music and pretty girls at the Columbia next week.

Gaiety Theatre.

"The Robinson Crusoe Girls" will be the magnet to draw seekers after amusement to the Gaiety Theatre this week. This company comes to town with a record of success in every city on the Eastern wheel. It may be said, also, that the girls are all pretty.

Colonial Theatre.

The final week of "The Arcadians" at the Colonial Theatre will begin to-morrow evening. Few musical plays of a generation have taken such firm hold on the public as "The Arcadians" has done and the last performances of the piece at the Colonial yield no signs of diminishing interest.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

A program of general excellence, made up of vaudeville and moving pictures will be offered this week at the Bowdoin Square Theatre.

JEALOUS OF AMERICANS.

Engagement of Opera Singers Stirs Up Berlin.

BERLIN, May 13.—The jealous cry that the German operatic stage is flooded with American artists, so long been heard, loudly in Berlin [illegible] in the other kingdoms and states. It became official a short time ago when a member of the Prussian Diet, Kopsch by name, violently attacked the general intendant of the Royal Opera and Playhouse, Count von Hulsen Haeseler, for maladministration generally and engaging an undue number of foreign singers in especial.

Herz Here May 22.

Arrangements have been completed by which Ralph Herz will be the next attraction at the Colonial Theatre, coming there May 22, immediately after the close of the engagement of "The Arcadians." He will be seen in "Doctor De Luxe."

DENMAN THOMPSON'S FAVORITE ANECDOTE

The late Denman Thompson never took any stock in a talk [illegible] As a matter of fact he wanted [illegible] his story [illegible] not an oration [illegible] point [illegible] his story of what he termed "The Bold Statesman's Maiden Speech."

As the story goes: Thompson [illegible] this country politician, who was one of the most taciturn men he had ever [illegible].

"How is it," asked Thompson, "that you hold all these fellows [illegible] without a bunch of talk? I can't [illegible] without an [illegible] something in that line. Didn't you ever make a speech?"

"Only made one speech [illegible]."

"Tell us about it," [illegible].

"It was this way. I [illegible] this speech at a banquet [illegible]. Well, I spent a week writing [illegible] and re-writin' it an' at last I got [illegible] shape.

"Then I went up in [illegible] and at the final place [illegible] making what I thought [illegible] tions.

"Say, I sweat over that." Then he laid his hand on Thompson's knee and [illegible] solemnly:

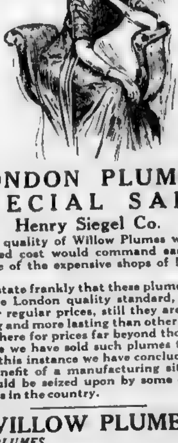
"Nobody but me and God knew that speech."

"Well?" said Denman.

"When I got up at the banquet," said the politician mournfully, "nobody but God knew that speech!"

LEGITIMATE CALLS CHARLES BIGELOW

Charles Bigelow will make his reappearance in the legitimate when he is seen in "The Kiss Waltz," a new musical production to be made at the Shubert Theatre next Saturday night. It was while playing in "Alma, Where Do You Live?" that Mr. Bigelow suddenly left the cast. Shortly afterward he made a brief appearance in vaudeville. For the past six months he has been in obscurity.



LONDON PLUMES SPECIAL SALE

Henry Siegel Co.

The same quality of Willow Plumes which we offer here at reduced cost would command easily twice our prices in some of the expensive shops of New York and Boston.

While we state frankly that these plumes do not quite qualify for the London quality standard, hence cannot command our regular prices, still they are better made, better looking and more lasting than other plumes which are sold elsewhere for prices far beyond those listed here.

Heretofore we have sold such plumes to the jobbing trade, but in this instance we have concluded to give the public the benefit of a manufacturing situation which otherwise would be seized upon by some of the biggest feather jobbers in the country.

WHY WE ARE SO WICKED IN OUR DREAMS

Why We Dream We Can Fly, Why We Dream We Are Falling, Why Real Murderers Have Pleasant Dreams, Why We Dream of Fish and Missing the Train. Science's New Dream Book.

SCIENCE has discovered and is reconstructing a real "dream book." Sleep and dreams, two of the great mysteries of life, are being examined in the laboratories. Dreams, it has been found, do have a significance. They are not meaningless wanderers from the night. When the old "dream books" told readers that to dream of fire meant hasty news their interpretation was superstitiously wrong, but they were right in theory—the dream of fire does mean something.

Havelock Ellis, the distinguished English scientist, has just written a remarkable book on dreams and what their scientific interpretations is. A review of some of its striking features follows.

"The Nightmare," a Weird Painting by the Famous German Artist, Johann Lux, in Which, Unconsciously, He Has Portrayed by His "Night Hag's" Hand One Cause of Nightmare—a Disturbance of Respiratory Functions.

THIS DREAMER NEEDS A DOCTOR.

Because the Dream of Lightning Indicates Neuralgic Pains; the Stamping Feet Defective Circulation; the Sensation of Flying Faulty Breathing; the Hill Climbing Horse an Overstrained Heart, and the Dream of Murder Is His Sleeping Self's Attempt to Explain the Feeling of Oppression and Terror Caused by Indigestion.

By Havelock Ellis

(From "The World of Dreams" published 1911 by Houghton, Mifflin Company, Boston and New York.)

WHEN we fall asleep we enter a dim and ancient house of shadow, unillumined by any direct ray from the outer world of waking life. As we emerge into the world of daily life again, for an instant the sunlight seems to flash into the obscure house before the door closes behind us; we catch one vivid glimpse of the chambers we have been wandering in, and a few more or less fragmentary memories come back to us of the life we have led there. But they soon fade.

Dreams, it is argued, are inevitably transformed in our hands; what we are studying is not our dreams, but only our waking, and probably altogether false impressions of our dreams.

Fantastic and marvellous as our dreams may sometimes be, they are in practically all cases made up of very simple elements.

Strictly speaking, the source of the dream as a dream can only be central, and a truly presentative dream is impossible. If our senses receive an impression, external or internal, and we recognize and accept that impression for what we should recognize and accept it when awake, then we cannot be said to be dreaming. The ray of sunlight that falls on the dreamer, the falling off of his bedclothes, the indigestible supper he ate last night—these things can no more "account" for his dream than the postman's knock can account for the contents of the letter he delivers. Whatever the stimuli from the physical world that may knock at the door of dreaming consciousness, that consciousness is apart from them, and stimuli can only reach it by undergoing transformation. They must put off the character which they wear as phenomena of the waking world; they must put on the character of phenomena of another world, the world of dreams. And here we have the origin of the dream book

Why We Reason in Dreams.

In dreams we are always reasoning. It is sometimes imagined that reason is in abeyance during sleep. So far from this being the case, we may almost be said to reason much more during sleep than when we are awake. That our reasoning is bad, often even preposterous; that it constantly ignores the most elementary facts of waking life, scarcely affects the question

Every dream is the outcome of this strenuous, wide-ranging instinct to reason. The supposed "imaginative faculty," regarded as so highly active during sleep, is the inactive play of this automatic logic

When we turn to those internal organs of the body which normally carry on their functions in a constant and equable manner, seldom or never obtruding themselves into the sphere of consciousness, any disturbance of function seems much less likely to be translated into dream consciousness in a simple and direct form. It is sufficient to take the example of the heart. When the heart is acting normally any consciousness of its action is as rare as sleep as awake. Even when cardiac action is disturbed, either by disease or by temporary excitement, dream consciousness seldom realizes the physical cause of the disturbance. Occasionally, indeed, the cardiac disturbance may reach sleeping consciousness without any very remote transformation; thus a lady dreams that she is fainting while really breathing in a slightly laboured and spasmodic way; but at another period the same lady, at a time when she was suffering from some degree of heart [illegible] dreamed one night, when the trouble was specially marked, that she was driving sweating horses up a steep hill, urging them on with the whip in order to avoid an express train which she imagined was behind her. This dream of sweating and panting horses climbing a hill has been noted by various observers to occur in connection with heart trouble

The real difficulty of the panting and struggling heart instinctively finds its apparent explanation in a familiar spectacle of daily life

In another case a dreamer awoke from a disturbed sleep associated with indigestion, having the impression that burglars were tramping upstairs, but immediately realized that the tramp of the burglars' feet was really the beating of her own heart. Somewhat similarly, when suffering from headache, I have dreamed of hammering nails into a floor, a theory obviously invented to account for the thump of throbbing arteries

Why Dreams Foretell Sickness.

An interesting group of phenomena connected with the sensory influences discussed in this chapter is furnished by the premonitions of physical disorders and diseases sometimes experienced in dreams. A physical disturbance may reach sleeping consciousness many hours, or even days, before it is perceived by waking consciousness and become translated into a more or less fantastic dream This has been recognized from of old and Aristotle, for instance, observed that dreams magnify sensory excitations and pointed out that they were thus useful to the physician in diagnosing symptoms not yet perceptible in the waking state

Thus Hammond knew a gentleman who, before an attack of hemiplegic paralysis, repeatedly dreamed that he had been cut in two down the middle line and could only move on one side, while a young lady who dreamed she had swallowed molten lead, though quite well on awakening, was at tacked by severe tonsilitis toward midday

There is certainly no profounder emotional excitement during sleep than that which arises from a disturbed or distended stomach, and is reflected by the pneumogastric to the accelerated heart and the excited respiration. We are thereby thrown into a state of emotional agitation, a state of agony and terror, such as we rarely or never attain during waking life. Sleeping consciousness, blindfolded and blundering, a prey to these massive waves from below, and fumbling about desperately for some explanation, jumps at the idea that only the attempt to escape some terrible danger or the guilty consciousness of some awful crime can account for this immense emotional uproar

The basic element of dreams in which we murder or commit immorarities appears to have been altogether due to the psychic influences of indigestion arising from a piece of pheasant. To account for our oppression during sleep, sleeping consciousness assumes moral cause, which alone appears to it of sufficient gravity to be adequate to the immense emotions we are experiencing. Even in our waking and fully conscious states we are inclined to give the preference to moral over physical causes, quite irrespective of the justice of our preferences; in our sleeping states this tendency is exaggerated.

In these cases we are not concerned with any primitive or personal impulse to crime but we feel ourselves to be so possessed by all the physical symptoms of terror, that the only adequate explanation of our state seems to be the theory that we have committed murder We then picture the murder. And if we are more concerned to flee from justice than to experience remorse, that is clearly because the really laboring and agitated heart suggests flight from pursuit far more than any passive emotion. There is, moreover, no more fundamental and primitive emotion than fear

It may well be that there is an element of truth in the belief that in dreams we are brought back to mental conditions somewhat more closely approaching those of primitive times.

The sleep of the real criminal, as Sante de Sanctis has shown on the basis of a wide experience, even of criminals guilty of serious acts of violence, tends to be peaceful and dreamless, and such dreams as they have are usually of a simple and innocent sort. If normal people often dream of crime, it is because they are more sensitive and imaginative, and because sleeping consciousness is strained to the utmost to invent a phantasmal tragedy adequate to account for the waves of emotion that beset it.

Dreams of flying may fairly be considered the best known and most frequent type of dream. They were among the earliest dreams to attract attention. It seems probable that the Greek conception of a flying Hermes or Mercury, the god who possessed special authority over dreams, was based upon such a source

From the inventor of the legend of Icarus onwards, men have cherished the belief that under some circumstances they could fly. And we may well suppose that that belief primarily owed its conviction to the desire to make practical the experience we have gained in dreams. Thus aviation comes from a dream!

Dream flight. It is necessary to note, is not usually sustained flight like that of a bird or an insect; the dreamer rarely or never imagines that he is flying high in the air. Hutchinson states that of all those he asked about the matter, hardly one remembered ever making a long flight in his dreams. Almost always the flights are low, skimming near the surface of the earth, slightly above the heads of pedestrains.

Professor Stanley Hall, who himself from childhood had dreams of flying, argues that they are "some faint reminiscent atavistic echo from the primeval sea," and that such dreams are really survivals—psychic vestigal remains comparable to the rudimentary gill-slits not uncommonly found in men and other mammals—taking us back to the far past when man's ancestors had no feet but had to swim or float Such a theory may accord with the profound conviction of reality that accompanies these dreams, though that may be more easily accounted for; but it has the very serious weakness that it offers an explanation which will not fit the facts. Our dreams are of flying, not of swimming; but the ancestors of the mammals probably lived in the water, not in the air. In preference to so hazardous a theory, it seems infinitely more reasonable to regard these dreams as an interpretation a misinterpretation from the standpoint of waking life—of actual internal sensations. If we can find the adequate explanation of a psychic state in conditions actually existing within the organism itself at the time, it is needless to seek an explanation in conditions that ceased to exist untold millenniums ago.

That the respiratory element is the chief factor in dreams of flying is clearly indicated by the fact that many persons subject to such dreams are conscious on awaking from them of a sense of respiratory or cardiac disturbance

Horace Hutchinson, who in his "Dreams and Their Meanings," has independently suggested that "this flying dream is caused by some action of the breathing organs," mentions the significant fact that the idea of filling the lungs as a help in levitation occurs in the flying dreams of many persons

There is, however, another element entering into the problem of nocturnal aviation; the state of the skin sensations. Respiratory activity alone would scarcely suffice to produce the imagery of flight if sensations of tactile pressure remained to suggest contact with the earth. In dreams, however, the sense of movement suggested by respiratory activity is unaccompanied by the tactile pressure produced by boots or the contact of the ground with the soles of the feet. In addition, also, there is probably, as Bergson also has suggested, numbness due to pressure on the parts supporting the weight

In the dream of flying, respiratory activity is excited, and in response to excitation it works at a high level adequate to the needs of the organism. In the dream of falling it may be that respiratory activity is depressed while concomitantly, perhaps, the anaesthetic state of the skin is increased. In the first state the abnormal activity of respiration triumphs in consciousness over the accompanying dulness of tactile sensation; in the second state the respiratory breathlessness is less influential than the numbness of the skin unconscious of any external pressure. This difference is rendered possible by the fact that in dreams of flying we are not usually far from the earth, and seem able to touch it lightly at intervals; that is to say that tactile sensitiveness is impaired, but is not entirely absent as it is in a dream of falling

It is not only in sleep that the sensation of flying is experienced In hysteria a sense of peculiar lightness of the body and the idea of the soul's power to fly may occur; thus in an ecstatic person who experienced the sensation of rising in the air there was anaesthesia of the soles of the feet.

In such hysterical ecstasy, which has always played so large a part in religious manifestations, it is well known that the sense of rising and floating in the air has often prominently appeared In all great religious phenomena occur, together with other nervous and hallucinatory manifestations.

The sensation of flying is one of the earliest to appear in the dreams of childhood. It is sometimes the last sensation at death. To rise, to fall, to fade away has often been the last conscious sensation recalled by those who seemed to be dying but have afterwards been brought back to life Those rescued from drowning have sometimes found the last conscious sensation was a beatific feeling of being borne upward. Pieron has noticed the same thing in a number of deaths from disease

In this way it comes about that out of dreams and of dream-like waking states, out of the most permanent of human spiritual conceptions has been evolved. To float, to rise into the air, to fly up to heaven, has always seemed to man to be the final climax of spiritual activity. The angel is the most ethereal creature the human imagination can conceive.

Why a Mosquito Becomes a Monster.

In our dreams we dramatize sensations and symbolize them. A mosquito's bite becomes the attack of a horrible monster. A burning throat is dramatized and symbolized into a dream of a fire. Here is the basis of the scientific dream book of the future.

It is not difficult, in the light of all that we have been able to learn regarding the psychology of the world of dreams, to account for the dream of the dead for its frequency, and for its poignant emotional effects. Here the older and stronger stream of impressions of the person alive meet the newer, weaker stream of impressions that he is dead. There is confusion

The dreamer sees an image of the dead person as alive, and is therefore compelled to invent a theory to account for this image; the theories that most easily suggest themselves are either that the dead person has never really died, or else that he has come back from the dead for a brief space. The mental and emotional conflict which such dreams involve makes them very vivid. They make a profound impression even after awakening, and for some sensitive persons are almost too sacred to speak of.

When a series of these dreams occurs concerning the same dead friend the tendency seems to be, on the whole—though there are certainly many exceptions—for the living reality of the vision of the dead friend to be more and more positively affirmed.

more and more positively affirmed. So we hear "miracles" and stories of the actual return of the dead.

Just as the savage or child accepts as a reality the illusion of the sun traversing the sky or the paranoiac has hallucination, so the dreamer seems to employ all the acutest powers of sleeping reason to construct a theory in support of the reality of the vision of his dead friend.

The primitive mind actually "saw things" —but these gods and super-normal creatures were only its own dreams made visible table. She anoints her skin with cucumber cream to keep away the wrinkles. Every inch of that wonderful face is gone over with microscopic care, and every suggestion of a blemish is driven away.

A Day With a Reigning Paris Beauty

After that she takes a drive on the Bois de Boulogne, where thousands admire her. Then she comes back for her lunch, her dejeuner, which for her is the principal meal of the day. It is an exquisite but generous meal, helped down by a dry white wine of a fine vintage.

After lunch Madame takes another drive in the Bois, drops in at one of the art exhibitions or other afternoon places of amusement in Paris, and then returns home, where she takes a little rest on her big, soft divan. "Plenty of rest; no violent exercise," is her advice to the beauty.

In the weather she suns herself on the balcony of her house. During the afternoon she finds time to receive her friends, who include all the famous artists and journalists of Paris. However many visitors she may have, she never neglects her little pet dogs, Zouzou and Sadi.

Then she prepares for the theatre, and to this artiste treat her intimate friends are usually admitted. At 6 o'clock she takes a very brief light meal and drives away to make her triumphal appearance before the footlights.

The performance over, she goes home or else to some restaurant for supper. She is in no hurry about going to bed, for she holds that haste is bad for beauty. She spends an hour or so in pleasant gossip before retiring.

Incidentally this last hour is about the only opportunity of enjoying domesticity allowed to her husband, for she is the wife of an adoring millionaire. The time must seem very short to him. Before retiring Madame protects her skin with pastes and bandages, so that no injury may be done to her exquisite contours while she is asleep and Time may not inflict his ravages during the night.

LITTLE KING MANUEL'S LATEST "FREEZE OUT"

His "Dear Friend," Regina Badet, the Modern Aphrodite (Successor to Gaby Deslys) Stolen From Him by the Disgustingly Rich Duke of Westminster.

"There is always room for one more arrow in the Duke's suit."

PARIS, May 3.—Poor little King Manuel! Not only has he lost the throne of Portugal, but now the place which he occupied in the regard of Mademoiselle Regina Badet, of the Opera Comique, has been taken from him by the naughty Duke of Westminster.

Everybody will recall the part which Mademoiselle Gaby Deslys played in the sad downfall of King Manuel. While he was spending all his time and money on this gay some little music hall artist in Paris, the republicans of Portugal were vulgarly and cruelly plotting to dethrone him.

Just about the time the republican plot was ripe, King Manuel became convinced that Mademoiselle Regina Badet was an even dicer artist than Mademoiselle Gaby Deslys, or at least, had a much finer figure. So occupied was he with this great discovery that he omitted to notice what the republicans were doing, and before he quite woke up he was conducted out of the country with military honors.

It is said that the occasional contemplation of Mademoiselle Badet's art had done much to console him for the sorrows of exile. She is the living embodiment of Venus. She made her greatest success in a brilliant performance entitled "Aphrodite," a series of Greek dances. She has thrilled all beholders by her wonderful exhibitions of her splendid figure. With consummate skill and audacity she displays every line and curve.

So brilliant were some of her performances that, although she was adversely criticised by the police, she won the admiration of the colossal by wealthy Duke of Westminster, who has done more than any man in Europe to aid the career of beautiful persons struggling for fame and fortune. The Duke is much richer than the dethroned King, and his admiration was, perhaps, the more appreciated on this account.

And now came another complication. The Duke admired Mlle. Badet so heartily that he withdrew his fascinated gaze for a time from Miss Gertie Millar, of the Gaiety Theatre, whom he recently declared to be the finest artist in her line in London.

"Why, Gertie compared to Badet, is a mere buxom dairymaid compared to the Dying Venus," a critic declared.

Of course, this is a triumph for French art. A great nation must feel gratified at having won the leading duke of a neighboring country from the contemplation of native art.

And then still another complication occurred in this story of complications and conflicting artistic emotions. The Duchess of Westminster began to grow restive about her noble husband's excessive absorption in artistic and theatrical affairs.

Just why she is worried is hard to explain, for she has been married ten years and during that time her husband has had a multitude of very absorbing and widely known extra-domiciliary interests.

A curious explanation has been offered by a proud and ingenuous Frenchman. The Duchess is a very handsome young woman and, during her husband's earlier affairs, his attention was mainly concentrated on somebody much less handsome than she, and many people remarked consolingly that he showed very poor taste. Now, it is pointed out by the Frenchman, he is absorbed in the contemplation of the living embodiment of Venus, a woman with a perfectly irreproachable figure, and this is more than the poor Duchess can endure. There are some things which even the best of women will not stand.

At any rate, it is understood that the Duke and Duchess are practically living apart. The other day the London papers solemnly announced that the Duke and Duchess were about to start on a visit to the King and Queen of Spain, but as a matter of fact, the Duchess started alone and the Duke was already in Paris.

There is even a rumor that worries King George and the Queen, that the Duchess may make an open breach — may even seek a divorce. This would throw a shadow over the Coronation, for the Duchess, who is one of the chief ornaments of the Court, would have to stay away, else, too, would the Duke, who, in his way, is the most prominent nobleman in England.

The Duchess was Miss Sheiach West, daughter of Mrs. Cornwallis West, once celebrated as a beauty and friend of King Edward. The Duke, who inherited his title in 1899, is the richest landowner in London. He has been particularly indignant at the new taxes imposed by the Government on land and other forms of wealth.

So angry was he that he withdrew the generous pension of $100 a year which his ancestors had been in the habit of paying to laborers who had worked on his estate upwards of fifty years, because, as he said, he couldn't afford that and the taxes, too.

"Ignorant persons and political demagogues," explained the Duke, "think that I have a lot of money to spare because my income is about $2,000,000 a year. They do not understand how much it costs a man in my position to live. Why, I have to pay my chef $5,000 a year, and then I have to keep twenty-five polo ponies and about two hundred horses of all sorts."

There were a great many other expenses, which, of course, he did not detail, his wife's dresses, for instance.

Immediately after his marriage in 1900 he went to the Boer war, where, being on the staff of the commander-in-chief, he did not run much risk from the Boers. While out there, however, during the time that might have been his honeymoon but for his patriotic devotion, he met the celebrated Mrs. Atherton, who has since figured in various matrimonial mix-ups in high society. The young Duchess was disposed to resent this affair, but relatives smothered over the trouble and domesticity was resumed in ducal halls after the cruel war.

Since then the young Duke has enjoyed a constantly increasing reputation as a generous and discriminating patron of the lighter forms of dramatic art. Whatever he may have withdrawn from aged laborers of his estate he has certainly expended many times over in this way. Many a struggling aspirant for artistic distinction received assistance from him. A word from the Duke to a theatrical manager meant everything. He was not interested in beginners alone. He helped to secure the comforts of life for those grand old Parisian veterans, Emilienne d'Alencon and Liane de Pougy.

He constantly enriched the English stage by importing new talent from France. He introduced to London that extraordinarily statuesque beauty, Mademoiselle Wanda Lotiers. She subsequently married a prince and her happy marriage must be attributed in part of the Duke's kindly efforts. Although he does not confine his admiration to one person for very long, when he turns to new fields he likes to know that the former objects of his interest are well cared for.

There is always room for another in the Duke's heart," said a fascinating little artist of the Parisian variety stage. "Cupid can always find a spot to plant another arrow in. His heart is large, but very tough."

This idea that the Duke is a large and easy target lends additional interest to a photograph of Mademoiselle Regina Badet in the act of shooting an arrow from a Cupid's bow. She is wearing a Greek sort of costume that is considered very becoming to her by the critics. It does not hamper the limbs. This is said to be the Duke's favorite picture of her.

Of course, when a woman is so superlatively fascinating as Mlle. Badet she cannot help making some enemies. One of them sent her a box of chocolates with poisoned fish hooks concealed in them. It was by a mere accident that she discovered one of these fish hooks just as she was about to swallow it. It is believed that a jealous woman took the way of seeking revenge on the triumphant beauty, but who it was has never been made known.

Dressing the Stage Beauties

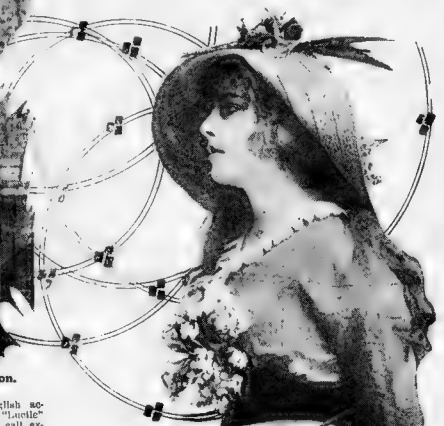
Lady Duff-Gordon Tells Why the Footlights Surround the Mirror of Fashion, and Why the Modes Come Through on the Spot-Light's Path.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and for most creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

Lady Duff-Gordon has just opened a new establishment in Paris, thus putting her in even closer touch with that centre of fashion

Her American establishment is at No 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

Mlle. Mistinguette, the Latest French Theatrical Success, in a New Duff-Gordon Gown



Lily Elsie, the Charming English Actress, Wearing a Distinctive "Lucile" Creation.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

YOU are not to be misled by my frequent references to the stage in connection with originality and taste in costumes for all women—both on and off the stage. It is not because actresses have diviner forms than their sisters in private life, or in the semi-private life of smart society, that some of my most artistic creations are inspired by and for them. It is because these gifted women, appearing in dramas depicting the fashionable life of to-day, may be trusted to interpret my art with all the genius and fidelity that they give to their own

To be quite frank, risking censure for being coldly practical—I shall remark right here that the stage is, for creations designed to embellish the female form divine, the ideal shop window. There! I have said it.

No mannequin can be trained to the art of illuminating the work of an artist in dressmaking to equal in that important achievement the heroine or ingenue of the best modern drama.

The exaggeration in details of costume, as well as in speech and gesture, that prevailed on the stage formerly, and was considered essential, has largely disappeared—almost entirely in the costuming of the latest society drama. Many of the gowns worn by Ethel Barrymore, Billy Burke, Irene Vanbrugh, Lily Elsie, even that actress sui generis, Mlle. Mistinguette, could be properly copied for her own drawing room, in detail, by any woman of good society.

With what consummate intuition of the value of lines, curves, sweeping trains, and of the gospel of proportion, our stage favorites on both sides of the Atlantic enhance the intrinsic charms of the gowns created for them!

In this way a new creation becomes a living thing. Being thus brought to life, it will continue to live in adorning almost any woman of receptive mind who has witnessed its real birth in the mimic social world of the modern stage drawing room

Herewith I am sending a photograph, by way of illustration, of that charming young English actress, Lily Elsie, wearing a "Lucile" design that she could not call exclusively her own more than a few weeks after its stage debut.

"Make me something like Lily Elsie is wearing in the second act," was the demand of debutantes and young society matrons that ere long grow monotonous.

The photograph shows the charm of the soft, filmy draperies under the front and side panels of heavier embroidery, the square decollete, embroidered short sleeves—and the final touch of the filmy white scarf looped behind the shoulders and thrown over the right arm

Worn by Lily Elsie, this creation sprang into instant life—there could be no doubts about its effectiveness.

Like Polaire, Mlle. Mistinguette owing to her wonderfully faithful portrayal of certain types of Paris character—has been distinguished in the press as the "ugliest woman on the stage." In other plays, however, it is safe to say that whole audiences have felt the charm of her unique attributes of grace and beauty

Mistinguette has the power to endue with life and artistic perfection costumes specially created for her—and to create emulation in the minds of women of fashion, not emulation respecting her art as an actress, but as regards the costume which her manner of wearing it illuminates

The accompanying photograph shows her in a "Lucile" model of which a number of her fair admirers in the audience have exhibited their envy The heavy fringed overskirt with short train worn under a close fitting tunic with fringed embroidery at the bottom, supported over the shoulders with broad embroidered bands, beneath which is a short-waisted chiffon loose bodice with short, fringed sleeves, completes a costume which proved to lend special grace to what she has called her "clothes-rack shape."

Hers, however, is not a clothes-rack shape, though one which—like many owned by women of fashion, especially young women—needs, and deserves, special study and treatment by the dress designer.

The photograph of the very beautiful Mme. Lantelme in her new play, "Gamine," shows what can be done in the way of almost rustic simplicity—with which few remarks I will conclude, for the present, these observations about the stage show-window advantages to the creator of gowns for women of fashion.

Speak English Only ana Travel Everywhere

By Cicely Hamilton.

IT WAS on a walking tour abroad that I first realized it. We were in a Switzerland that was not the Switzerland of the beaten track and the circular tourist; a Switzerland that you reached on your own two feet with your baggage slung on your back; where the gasthaus took the place of the hotel and the liveried interpreter was as wanting as the English tongue.

And after three or four days of a country that was truly foreign—after three or four days of German to right of us, German to left of us, German from the chambermaid, and German from the wayfarer who pointed out the path—it was borne in upon me that those teachers of my youth who had so often and so earnestly informed me that a knowledge of European languages was a necessary preliminary to the delights of European travel spoke either in ignorance or in guile

With infinite pains and unwillingness I had applied myself in my school days to the study of the German speech; and now, when I came to travel with it, I found that an hour or so with a dictionary would have sufficed for all my needs.

The truth is that, as far as the ordinary tourist is concerned, the language difficulty is greatly overestimated. Even were the race of interpreters swept off the earth to-morrow, some fifty words—so they were but wisely chosen and adapted to his needs—would carry a traveller in comfort from one end of a country to the other

Fifty words—nouns, most of them, with such exceptions as "Please," and "Thank you," and "How much?"—would procure him practically everything he wanted for his daily use, from a stamp to a glass of beer. I am not at all sure that fifty is not an excessive allowance; there are so many words and phrases that at first sight seem indispensable and on second thought prove quite superfluous

A railway ticket, for instance you will get one all right if you turn up at the booking office knowing the name of your station. Nor is there the slightest necessity to explain in a foreign tongue that you are going; to start and would like to have your bill. Appear in the hall with your hat on; you will not be allowed to leave the place without your bill

Obviously, then, if my theory be correct, we have had a good many things drummed into our useful brains for no other reason than this—that our teachers learned them before us—it may be most for the purpose of teaching the when learned. And foreign languages for the multitude—not I repeat, for the specialist—I take to be one of the needless subjects imparted, not in the interests of the pupil, but for the benefit of the teacher.

There is no valid cause why the average man should rack his brains over other people's grammar and other people's verbs; in nine cases of ten he does so only in blind obedience to the scholastic tradition that the man who can talk bad French or write bad Latin is better educated than the man who can only express his thoughts in good English.

I cannot help suspecting that the schoolmaster's affection for the foreign language is due to the simple fact that not one human being in ten thousand can ever learn it properly. The amount of energy wasted on it is enormous. As results, all things considered, are pitiable in the extreme. Apparently every member of the German [illegible] learns English; but so far I have not met a German who speaks our tongue as we speak it [illegible], I suppose, is what they are trying to do.

But what recks the schoolmaster of these things? He has discovered a subject which no one can master and, wise with the wisdom of the serpent, he keeps us seeking away at it hopelessly—and paying him fees while we peg.

"DOING" RICH, WISE MR. MORGAN

The Merry Game of Selling Our Financial Autocrat Busts That Are Half Faked, Chateaux That Cannot Be Taken Away and Copes That Must Be Given Back

THE most enjoyable and profitable sport among the art dealers of Europe is known as "doing Pierpont Morgan."

An artist has spoken of Mr. Morgan as "a patron of art dealers, and of art." Perhaps the art dealers resent the appellation, for they have one overriding possible to punish Mr. Morgan for it.

When a work of art dealer needs an extra $100,000 or $1,000,000 he throws out a hint that he has an old mine carved before any one could carve one, or a primitive painting painted before any one could paint, and Mr. Morgan is sure to come along and buy it.

The man who controls the biggest banks and most of the railroads in the United States, who can tell the value of a trust at a glance, and detect the billion-dollar Steel Trust, is the easiest mark when it comes to selling him an old mug or piece of parchment.

The latest case of "doing Mr. Morgan" is the affair of the head of St. Martin. The genuine head which goes by this name belonged to the Church of Soudeilles, in the Limousin, in Central France, a region noted for its early religious art treasures and curiosities. St. Martin was a bishop who, in the dark ages, rendered great services to this country by saving them from the terrible Norse pirates.

The head is made from beaten copper. Upon it is a bishop's mitre, and the bust is covered with an ecclesiastical garment. In front of the bust is a large crystal, cut in octahedron form, and around it are eight semi-precious stones. It is a very curious work of primitive art. As long ago as 1791 it was declared a historical monument by the Government, thus making its sale illegal.

When it was placed on exhibition in 1900, several of the stones were stolen from it. In consequence of this the Minister of Fine Arts caused it to be enclosed in a strong box, the key of which he confided to the Mayor of Soudeilles.

Last year a Government inspector discovered that the genuine head had been removed and a very clever imitation substituted. All France was stirred up by the discovery, and an investigation was made. Then the Mayor of Soudeilles confessed. The little town had been in need of money to mend the roads and help the poor. He and the deputy for the district had sold the sacred old bust for $8,000, replaced it with a clever but inexpensive imitation, and devoted the money to public purposes.

The French Government pursued investigations. It discovered that one head of St. Martin was in the possession of an art dealer in Brussels, and another in the collection of Pierpont Morgan in London. The old saint was performing miracles still!

M. Dujardin Beaumetz, the French Minister of Fine Arts, decided that the bust in Brussels was the one improperly sold by the authorities of Soudeilles, while that in London was a copy, as far as the metal was concerned, but decorated with some of the stones stolen from the original in 1900. This partially bogus bust had undoubtedly been sold to Mr. Morgan for a large sum of money, said to be $100,000.

Since the first discovery that the original head of St. Martin had been removed from Soudeilles, new copies have been discovered nearly every day.

M. Romeuf, one of the best known authorities in Paris, declares to be his seven six distinct copies of the head, not counting the original bust but including the one that was in London, and is said to have been sold to Mr. Morgan. M. Romeuf has not sold anything to Mr. Morgan lately.

One of these heads is in Paris, another in Berlin, another in Frankfort, another in Cologne, and another in Vienna. All are made with perfect skill and taste, and only an expert who had specialized in early French religious metal work could tell they were copies. Making heads of St. Martin is now a well established industry.

When the French reporters asked Mr. Morgan how he felt about St Martin's head, they reported that all he said was "Brouf! Brouf!"

At about the same time Mr. Morgan was snapping up this rich prize he was casting his eye on the ancient Chateau of Kerjean, in Brittany. This place is a perfect storehouse of ancient Breton art. It is filled with exquisite pieces of stone carving and woodwork.

The heirs were forced to sell it. The art experts told Mr. Morgan that here was another wonderful opportunity for him—and them. He authorized them to catalogue and value all the treasures it contained and to make arrangements for the purchase of the place, regardless of expense. His intention was to remove its finest pieces of stonework and carving to America.

On the Left the Authentic Bust of St. Martin, Which Was Abstracted from the Church of Soudeilles, On the Right the Copy Which Was Substituted for It.

The mere cost of all these preliminaries was enormous.

When Mr. Morgan had taken home his famous head of St Martin he learned that it was a 'fake,' with a few old stones inserted to give plausibility, and which he had spent money to acquire the exquisite, an mistakably genuine Chateau of Kerjean, the French Government stepped in and took it.

The Government took this action under the law which authorizes it to declare any ancient building a historic monument and to forbid its demolition. If owners are not able to preserve it, they must sell to the Government. In this way the Government acquired the old building for about the same amount that Mr. Morgan spent in preliminaries.

Just as painful and expensive for Mr. Morgan was the famous incident of the cope of Ascoli. The cope is one of the most remarkable ancient and beautiful examples of ecclesiastical embroidery in existence. It is a bishop's cope. It was presented to the Cathedral of Ascoli by Pope Nicholas IV. in 1288. For centuries it had been preserved in the cathedral of which it was the most valued treasure.

A wretched, poverty stricken photographer of the town stole the ancient cope from the cathedral and sold it for a trivial sum to an art dealer. Mr. Morgan bought it with a party for Sofgnol. Then the theft was discovered and the poor photographer committed suicide. When this happened Mr. Morgan returned the cope to the cathedral, accepting the loss of the purchase money.

He never stopped to think how such an extraordinary ecclesiastical relic could have been in the hands of a dealer. He never seems to think in such a case. Many of the objects that stuff the museums in London and New York must be similar origin. In many cases the theft was committed so long ago that it cannot be traced and in others those responsible for it are able to prevent an exposure.

How many of the objects in these museums of Mr. Morgan are as bogus as the head of St. Martin? Even the Louvre, the principal museum of the French Government, directed by the best artistic connoisseurs that the Government can secure, has been duped by experts in faking.

Some years ago the French Government bought for the Louvre a wonderful work of art. It was a golden tiara, said to have adorned the head of Saitapharnes, a forgotten monarch of about the third century, who had ruled over a Greek colony in southern Russia.

As soon as this work was put on exhibition the art dealers informed Mr. Morgan that they could secure for him some more relics of the same interesting and obscure period of civilization provided any other ornaments that the subjects of Saitapharnes had worn. Of course, Mr. Morgan wanted them, and got them at an enormous price.

Then experts who had not sold anything to Mr. Morgan discovered that the tiara in the Louvre was a modern work, a "fake," and then that it had been substituted by an unknown Russian Hebrew named Rostchinowski.

He has since given an interesting exhibition of the ancient Greek jewelry executed by him.

Dr. Wilhelm Bode bought for the Emperor Frederick Art Museum, in Berlin, a wax bust which he believed to be by Leonardo da Vinci, or one of his pupils, but which has since been proved to have been made [illegible] a reputed portrait [illegible] Dr. Bode is a trusted [illegible] Morgan. How many [illegible] Bode [illegible] Mr. Morgan has spent on objects of art [illegible] three months he was supposed to spend $1,000,000. He thinks nothing of paying six times the hitherto accepted market value of an article.

Can we wonder that the art dealer working hard for a living tries hard to work Mr. Morgan?

"When Mr. Morgan had taken home his famous head of St. Martin he learned that it was a 'fake,' with a few old stones from the original inserted to give it plausibility, and when he had spent his money to acquire the exquisite chateau of Kerjean the French Government stepped in and took it."

Why Men Should Not Wear Peek-a-Boo Waists

By PROFESSOR ADOLPH VON HEUBNER
(Of the Royal Academy of Vienna.)

For years women have worn pneumonia blouses, and all about in the chief cities who, the streets were running with water, clothed themselves in transparent silk stockings in a temperature below freezing point and have survived.

They go bareshouldered and bare-shouldered today, and the opera and are immune to the consequences of draughts and sudden changes of temperature that for people in other fully clad make encounters with colds in the head.

Women are not afraid to [illegible] a breeze in a [illegible] waist. What man would dare wear a peek-a-boo waist, even in the well regulated temperature of his bachelor apartment?

Men have often wondered why their bodies are so much more sensitive to cold than those of the fair sex, and why they should not wear peek-a-boo waists.

Women have a special layer of fat all over their bodies thicker than males, and so attired when barehanded dwell in caves and huts. This explains how women can stand evening dress, thin shoes and the like in the worst and coldest weather, in spite of the fact that their skin is more tender than man's and their constitutions generally less able to stand cold and wet.

Of course, women do suffer for these facts, but in nothing like the proportion that men would.

Men have a layer of fat, too, but it is running like so thick as woman's. Fat of course, is the best protection against cold.

Then another interesting question presents itself. Has woman always had this special layer of fat? Was it acquired in prehistoric times, or is it merely Nature's remedy for woman's insistence on open work stockings in bad weather?

After exhaustive inquiries and comparisons, the conclusion is reached that it was acquired in times when the woman still [illegible] waves. In those days the men were able to keep the males warm by hunting and fighting.

But the woman had to stay at home and care to look after the baby and cook her husband's dinner whenever he might bring it in.

At the caves or huts must have been [illegible] and wind blowing, and a room, was had no hunting to warm their [illegible] and enable them to [illegible] and suffer [illegible] accordingly.

So Mother Nature, ever [illegible] the woman to help her children, set to work and gradually built up on women a special layer of protective fat. That took a few thousand years probably, for Nature never works in a hurry, and [illegible] is no object to her but bit by bit, the work was completed, and now women can play what seem to men foolhardy tricks with comparative immunity.

However, the immunity is only comparative, for generations of civilized [illegible] have to a certain extent weakened the resistance of women to cold and damp, and pneumonia blouses and openwork stockings in our so-called Spring have, of course, still much to answer for.

LOST—A Perfectly Good Ambassadorship, Because Two First Class Psychologists Couldn't Fit Their Shoes to Their Own Lasts!

Berlin, May 5

IT is perfectly understood that Dr. David Jayne Hill lost the United States Ambassadorship at this capital because he was only a scholar and a working diplomat and not able to give splendid dinners and balls, walk backward gracefully over a highly polished floor, arrange a quibble between two professors over a court gown with exquisite tact and generally make himself ornamental at court

Dr Hill is the best known authority on diplomacy in the United States. He is the author of a history of Diplomacy in the International Development of Europe," and of many other serious works on this and other subjects. He is a doctor of Letters of the University of Geneva, Switzerland, and has a dozen degrees from American universities. He became president of Rochnell University, Ohio, at thirty six years of age, and two years later was president of Rochester University

He thought that the Ambassadorship at Berlin would be a suitable sequel to this successful career, but he has found out his mistake

In the first place, he had the misfortune to come after that magnificent millionaire with the magnificent name, Mr Charlemagne Tower Never had the United States Embassy been conducted with so much splendor as by Mr. Tower American Ambassadors without fortunes cannot do that sort of thing

The Kaiser honored Mr Tower particularly, placed his arm around his waist, said there was never another Ambassador like him, and that if he had to go he hoped another would come who would do things as handsomely as Mr. Tower. It was a triumph for millions

As the imperial remarks were made after poor Dr Hill's appointment had been announced, it cast rather a shadow over his debut

And now that Dr. Hill has retired after a brief term, many Americans are saying that the next Ambassador must be a man who can entertain as handsomely as Charlemagne Tower

Several Americans are willing to make the attempt. Conspicuous among them is Cornelius Vanderbilt, eldest son of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt and older brother of the somewhat noted Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Cornelius received a rather smaller share of the family millions than Alfred because of his unshakable determination to marry the brilliant and handsome woman who is now his wife, but he received quite enough to enable him to outshine Dr. Hill as a society Ambassador.

The Kaiser likes Mr. Vanderbilt and his wife. He has shown them many flattering attentions and he has visited them twice on the Vanderbilt yacht, North Star. When the Kaiser's brother, Prince Henry, visited the United States the Vanderbilt house was the only private establishment at which he accepted an invitation to dinner. That was by the express wish of the Kaiser

Mrs. Vanderbilt, it is said, would like the position of Ambassador's wife; has been working for it, and would make her husband's term of office even more brilliant socially than that of Charlemagne Tower

"Mrs. Vanderbilt," said a warm partisan of socially eminent ambassadors, "would certainly steer her husband clear of such a ridiculous episode as that in which two American professors slanged one another because one of them had deprived the other's wife of the opportunity to wear her new court gown"

The speaker referred to the curious exchange of amenities between the two American exchange professors in Berlin—Professor Muensterberg and Professor C. Alfonso Smith, which undoubtedly cast the final shadow over Ambassador Hill's socially inglorious tenure of office

The trouble began when the Kaiser went to Professor Smith's opening lecture and afterward conversed with him for ten minutes, while he conversed with Professor Muensterberg only three. The latter afterward explained this episode with grave dignity, saying

"The Kaiser may have talked less to me, but what he said was more important."

Then Professor Smith casually revealed to Professor Muensterberg that his wife intended to be presented to the Emperor at the court reception known as the "Schleppencour." Professor Muensterberg remarked tartly that his wife had not been presented, and he didn't think Mrs Smith should be Professor Smith agreed with him, but when he went home he found that Mrs. Smith had had a new gown specially made for the court, and she was determined to wear it.

Professor Smith thereupon went to Ambassador Hill and arranged for the presentation after all.

When Professor Muensterberg learned that he wrote to Ambassador Hill that he would make trouble if any privilege was given to any other professor that was not given to him. So the presentation was off once more

This was just the kind of entanglement that Ambassador Hill was likely to get into. Having been a college president, he could not keep himself free from professors. His little home was a notorious resort for professors, instead of being filled with princes, millionaires and the socially elect

Under a Vanderbilt regime that sort of thing couldn't happen. The ordinary American traveling might have some difficulty in getting in at the front door of the American Embassy, but he would at least have the satisfaction of knowing that the Kaiser wasn't ashamed of the American representative.

"STOLEN-MY

Pitiful Cry of a Beautif

Rich Father-in-Law H

to Tear Her Husband

Put Him Behind Ins

By Bessie Faulkner Chapman-Pierce.

"STOP thief! Give me back my husband!" When these words—in effect—are addressed to a multi-millionaire, one of the industrial magnates of this country, they have more than the usual significance—for husbands are not infrequently taken, or lured, away from their wives

In this instance the husband's father is accused—Henry Clay Pierce, head of the great Texas oil monopoly—and the accuser is a beautiful young woman of almost equal celebrity on both sides of the Atlantic—Mrs Bessie Faulkner-Chapman-Pierce, once released by divorce from T. Irwin Chapman, of Boston; one time actress in David Belasco companies, feted in smart English society as "Lady Betty." Also, not very long ago, reported engaged to marry Baron "Jimmy" Rothschild, of the great European banking house of Rothschild.

There seems to be no doubt that Betty Chapman had her choice of numerous brilliant opportunities to marry abroad. The devotion of Baron Rothschild was unmistakable. He was frankly overjoyed when she appeared publicly wearing the colors of his racing stable.

Presently, while visiting in England, she had an opportunity to become well acquainted with a young man she had met a few years before in Boston. He was Roy Pierce, son and heir of the oil magnate

On this page she tells how she discovered him to be the one man she had long been waiting for. When both were again in this country they were married by a New York Alderman, rather privately, owing to the young man's misgivings about what his father's attitude toward the match would be.

Mrs Pierce's statement, here printed, describes with sufficient detail the disaster to their happiness which resulted when, finally, the son announced his marriage to his father

She has not seen him since the day he left her to make the announcement. This poor wife, with multi-millions arrayed against her, is now fighting to get her husband back in the court which has been asked to annul the marriage.

In her statement Mrs. Pierce pertinently inquires whether she appears to be a woman a man would have to be insane to marry. Her record has been the subject of many columns in hundreds of newspapers. Her photograph, here reproduced, is a recent and very good likeness.

MY husband has been stolen from me. That's the word—stolen. But I shall get him back again. Yes, in spite of the Pierce family multi millions arrayed against me. This is not a case of stolen gold mines, or railroads, in which the side with the most millions wins. It is a case of a husband stolen from his lawfully wedded wife—which is different

When my husband told his father of our marriage he said simply, "You're crazy!" and had him locked up in a sanitarium.

That was the first time Roy had been called crazy.

ESCAPED

From the Harem Torturers' Strangling Bow-strings, the Sinister Sack That Hangs Like Damocles' Sword, Over Every "Wife."

By Alma Surok de Courladon.

I WAS an inmate of Abdul Hamid's harem. I was one of his favorites, and I knew of the murder of his discarded favorites. Into that hideous existence I was thurst against my will. It was the doom of many others, but finally I escaped.

My father was the wealthy Osman Surok, of Constantinople. My mother was his Circassian slave Effendi. She smuggled me away to a convent in France. There I fell in love and married.

My husband was Viscount George Henri Napoleon de Courladon. He was a physcian. We were very happy. But when I was twenty he died.

In the great crises of our lives our thoughts turn to the old home. We crave a mother's sympathy. I wanted to weep out the woes of my early widowhood on my mother's breast.

I took passage to Constantinople. I arrived there. I asked for my mother, and was told that she had died of a fever. I asked for my father, and learned that he had died of grief for loss of his favorite child, the little girl that had been stolen when she was five years old. After I had received the news I did not know what to do, where to go. I walked on La Plage and wept. Suddenly a hand was laid lightly upon my arm, pleasant eyes looked into mine.

"I am sorry to see you so sad," said the young man, little older than myself. "Come with me to drive and we will talk about your griefs."

"I do not think I know you," I said, trying to recall his features.

"But I know you," he answered. Come with me. I am a friend"

Remember, if I seem very simple to you, that I had been reared in a convent in France, that I had led a sheltered home life with my husband, and that I remembered nothing, so knew almost nothing of the life of the harem.

When we drove up to a magnificent building I supposed that we were going to have tea in the tea-room of a fashionable hotel. We were ushered into a magnificent chamber, and my companion gave the order for tea. But while we were drinking it something furtive in his manner, though outwardly he was smiling, frightened me. I rose suddenly from the table.

"Pardon me, I must go," I said.

"No," he answered. "You must stay here."

"Where are we?" I asked.

"In the seraglio of the great Sultan, Abdul Hamid, whose companion you shall be. What honor I have conferred upon you, Madame Courladon. I have placed you in the harem of His Gracious Majesty."

Shrieking and struggling, I was led away by two huge black men.

"This is His Majesty's palace," said one of the Blacks. "If he hears you scream he will order you sewed up in a bag and thrown into the sea. He hates women who cry. He wants to see them laugh, laugh, laugh"

I was placed in the charge of a toothless old woman, who made me acquainted with the Sultan's tastes in the same way.

For weeks I wept and implored them to let me die. Knives were kept out of my reach

Gradually I came to understand that if I did not yield and become as the others about me I should not be allowed to die, but would be tortured and mutilated in some nameless, horrible way. Well—I became like the others.

Sultan Abdul Hamid loved me. He told me so. The jewels I received, the frequency with which he dropped his handkerchief before me, the summons to his palace, the jealousy with which he guarded me, seemed to prove that he did. And when, hating the life of the harem as I did, I once tried to escape by crawling through one of the round windows of the baths and a black man dragged me back, the other women said:

"Now she will be tortured."

But I was not. "Let her fast," were the Sultan's orders. And for four days I had nothing to eat. A light sentence indeed for others who had tried to escape were mutilated and tortured, or were killed and buried in the sea.

A sight that made the harem more horrible to me than it could have been had I not peeped where I was forbidden was the removal of two of the women who no longer pleased Abdul Hamid. They had grown old and were losing their attractiveness. Both had born him several children. But they were thirty, and, because of their age, offended his sight. Each was taken out into the court at nightfall. Each was accompanied by two big blacks. One of the men led the cowering figure to the middle of the court. The other stood at a distance and aimed. There was a flash of red in the purple of the night. There was an anguished cry, then silence, and on the flagging of the court, no harder than her fate, lay one of the Sultan's discarded favorites, dead. The black men leaned over her, lifted her body between them and bore her away.

I said nothing next day of what I had seen. Nor did any other woman. Each thought of the bag folded away and hidden beneath the finery of her closet. That was her burial bag. She knew that, displeasing the Sultan, she might be shot as I had seen these old women of thirty shot; seen them thrust into their bags and dragged across the stones of the street to be cast into the Bosphorus Some of the women not killed by the pistol shot revived, and, with muffled shrieks, make a final death struggle in the bag in which they are dragged to their death.

The harem woman's one avenue of connection with the outside world is the physician who attends them when they are ill These men are usually Germans or Frenchmen, sometimes English. I determined to try to escape by means of one of these men. I resolved to use the only means of persuasion I had—my charms. I tried to induce a German doctor to help me to escape. He shrugged his shoulders and answered:

"Madame, the penalty for this would be death."

Then I tried to prevail upon an English physician. The answer was the same. At last, the French dentist, sent to cure me of an ulcerated tooth, listened to me. He made no objection. He did not interrupt. He merely looked at me and smiled, and I knew that I had won.

He said to the Sultan: "I can cure the lady, but it will be necessary for her to go to a sanitarium. The drug that must be used in the cure is powerful and would offend Your Majesty. It is so powerful that it would permeate every corner of the seraglio."

The Sultan without hesitation consented. Dr. Portier—he, too, was a nobleman, the Viscount Jean Portier—escorted me out of the walls to a sanitarium by night. But no sooner had I reached the sanitarium than I begged him to let me have my little son.

"I shall die without him," I said

The doctor sought one of the black men who had been kind to me, because when he was a young man he had been in my father's service, and he remembered the little girl who had been stolen away by her uncle. The black man said:

"Of course, I will carry the child to her in the morning."

"At seven o'clock I had the baby in my arms. At nine Dr. Portier and I were aboard a ship bound for Rouen.

I trembled for the head of the old black man, but news came to us that, when days afterward I was expected to return from the sanitarium and did not come and the doctor also was missing. Abdul Hamid, in a terrible rage, sent for him and the black man simply told the truth.

"I took the child," he said. "She received it with kisses. I came away. That is all I know."

He is still living.

We resided at Rouen for eight months. Then Dr. Portier contracted typhoid fever and died I mourned him very deeply—I still mourn him, for I loved him deeply.

I took my baby to the house that had sheltered me when I was a child We lived for seven years with La Dame de la Sagesse. I placed my boy in a brothers' school in France. I was invited to travel and lecture—and so I am here.

I was glad when I heard of Abdul Hamid's abdication. I always hated him.

HUSBAND!"

s never crazy until he married me. Now, I will it to those who know me—even to those who seen my photograph—whether a man would o be crazy to marry me. I don't say wise, or of ble judgment as regards beauty; but would he e to be called crazy?

I now they are appealing to the law to steal sband from me legally. They are taking s s lisly the Court that because Roy married e a crazy, and, being crazy, his marriage should nulled w about me? I have not asked to be freed from my husband because he is crazy, or for any other reason. Am I crazy that my crazy husband's "next friend" should sue for the annulment of our marriage? I haven't heard about it. And nobody has tried to rush me off to a madhouse.

You have perhaps read in the newspapers of an offer of $100,000 to me to stay away from the annulment proceedings. No, don't believe that of them. They're not crazy!

It's shameful to say that any money settlement has been proposed to me. I don't want any of those Texas oil millions they seem to be so afraid will go to some undeserving woman through marriage with the Pierce heir. I have property of my own. What I want and what I am going to have is my husband.

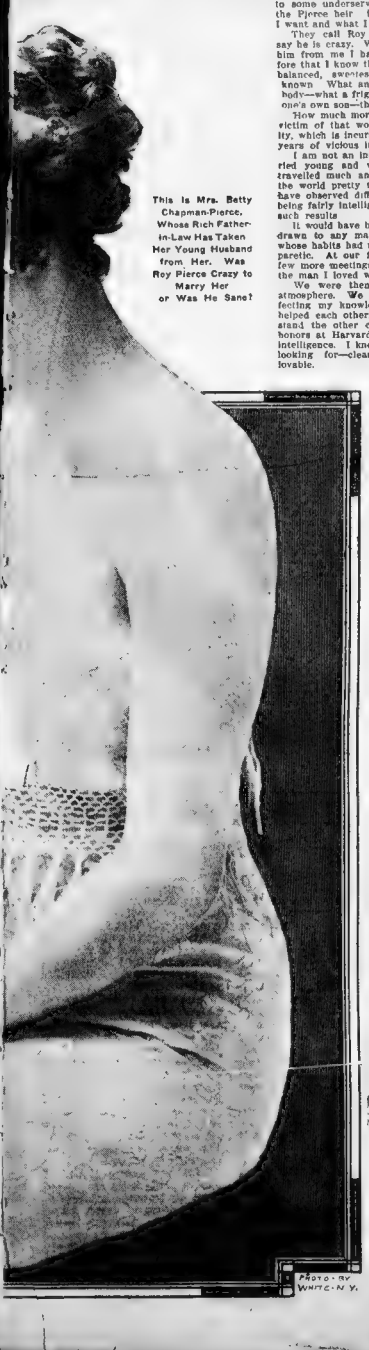
They call Roy a boy—he is twenty-eight! They say he is crazy. What he has become since they stole him from me I have no means of knowing. But before that I know that Roy Pierce was the sanest, most balanced, sweetest-hearted gentleman I have ever known. What an awful thing to say falsely of anybody—what a frightful, hideous thing to say falsely of one's own son—that he is crazy!

How much more infamous to intimate that he is a victim of that worst, most deplorable form of insanity, which is incurable, and which usually presupposes years of vicious indulgence—paresis!

I am not an inexperienced young girl. I was married young and was a mother years ago. I have travelled much and have a right to say that I know the world pretty thoroughly. In different countries I have observed different types of human wrecks, and, being fairly intelligent, could understand the causes of such results.

It would have been impossible for me to have been drawn to any man, as I was drawn to Roy Pierce, whose habits had rendered him liable to the fate of a paretic. At our first meeting I liked him. After a few more meetings I knew that I loved him, and that the man I loved was wholesome and good.

We were then in England, in the same social atmosphere. We used to read together. I was perfecting my knowledge of the French language. We helped each other. What one did not at first understand the other could often explain. He had taken honors at Harvard; he had a fine mind and a quick intelligence. I know he was the one man I had been looking for—clean, honest, calm, capable, gentle, lovable.



This is Mrs. Betty Chapman-Pierce, Whose Rich Father-in-Law Has Taken Her Young Husband from Her. Was Roy Pierce Crazy to Marry Her or Was He Sane?

As is the case of many heirs to millions, he had never been trained in business affairs. But he was not the "Millionaire's son" type at all. You never saw his name in the newspapers in connection with Gay White Way spendthrift exploits. "Dissipation, late suppers and compos mentis," and all those things alleged by his father's lawyers are absurd, ridiculously absurd.

Roy Pierce was no fool, ready to tie himself to any woman who should capture his fancy. No woman lacking a serious view of the married state could have won him—his character was too symmetrical, his mind too well balanced.

Our real domesticity was deferred longer than was agreeable to either of us. He owed it to his manhood not to defer the announcement of our marriage longer—but while his manhood was equal to the task, the result was disastrous.

The end is not yet. I love the husband who was stolen from me, and I shall get him back.

The Site of the Lost Atlantis, Destroyed Like Sodom and Gomorrah, Revealed by an Ancient Bronze Mask.

DR. LEO FROBENIUS, a famous German scholar and explorer, reports that he has discovered the mysterious lost land of Atlantis in West Africa.

Discovering Atlantis has long been a pastime of dreamers, but Dr. Frobenius's discovery is of a more substantial character than any previously reported. He has discovered remarkable works of art, which certainly prove the existence of a hitherto unknown civilized race in Africa.

The belief in the existence of Atlantis rests primarily upon the description of it written by the great Greek philosopher Plato, who alleged that he had received it from his ancestor, Solon, who obtained it during his travels in Egypt. Plato introduces the subject as follows:

"The most famous of all the Athenian exploits was the overthrow of the island Atlantis. This was a continent lying over against the Pillars of Hercules, greater in extent than Lybia and Asia Minor put together, and was the passage to other islands and to another continent, of which the Mediterranean Sea was only the harbor; and within the Pillars the Empire of Atlantis reached to Egypt and Tyrrhenia."

Plato describes the vast power, wealth, luxury and wickedness of the people of Atlantis, how they almost conquered all the people on the Mediterranean and were overthrown by the Athenians in early times.

"This mighty power," he says, "arrayed itself against Egypt and Hellas and all the countries bordering on the Mediterranean. Then did Athens bravely, and won renown over the whole earth. For at the peril of her existence, and when the other Hellenes had deserted her, she repelled the invader, and of her own accord gave liberty to all the nations within the Pillars. A little while afterward there was a great earthquake, and those Athenians who had settled in Atlantis and the island itself disappeared into the sea. This is the explanation of the shallows which are found in that part of the Atlantic Ocean."

The fate of the lost island was, according to ancient tradition, a punishment for the wickedness of the people of Atlantis, and especially for the way in which they had varied the worship of Poseidon. Like the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, they were swallowed up for their wickedness, but with water instead of fire.

It has been calculated that Atlantis existed nine thousand years ago.

The Pillars of Hercules, spoken of by Plato, are, of course, the Straits of Gibraltar, and the most obvious interpretation of this reference is that Atlantis was a great island lying beyond those straits and occupying most of the Atlantic Ocean. Ignatius Donnelly argued most ingeniously from Plato's statement that Atlantis was on the way to another continent, that it reached nearly to America. He further sought to show that the ancient civilization of Mexico was derived from Atlantis.

But it must be remembered that the ancients, even though as intelligent as Plato, had very distorted ideas of the earth's surface, owing to their lack of maps, and in connection with this point it must be noted that Plato speaks of the lost Atlantis as "reaching to Egypt." This makes it equally permissible to argue that Atlantis was really in Africa. Further, it should be remembered that the projecting west coast of Africa would have appeared to an ancient navigator to be beyond the Pillars of Hercules.

There is serious evidence for believing that a great land once existed in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, for the ocean bottom has subsided greatly. It has been argued that the Canary Islands and the Azores are remnants of the lost continent, and the delightful character of their climate lends strength to the theory that they were part of the fertile and favored lost land. But this line of argument can throw no light on the actual character of the civilization of Atlantis, such as is furnished by Dr. Frobenius's practical researches.

Dr. Frobenius made his great finds at Ife, in [illegible] Nigeria, a [illegible] possessing in [illegible] a [illegible] fallen [illegible] a part of the [illegible] may be [illegible] Plato's narrative.

The most remarkable object discovered is a bronze head with a curious crown upon it, closely resembling the head of the god Poseidon, the Greek equivalent of Neptune. The crown of the African Neptune is ornamented in front by an imposing horn-like decoration. The head is hollow, suggesting that it was used to hold liquid. The head is most significant because Poseidon, according to a tradition mentioned by Plato, was the founder of Atlantis. The workmanship is very fine. The features of the bronze head are Mongolian in character, with a slightly negroid suggestion, a type never before observed. The head was known to the natives as "Olokun" and greatly revered by them.

Here a curious complication of this extraordinary chapter of discovery must be mentioned. When Dr. Frobenius had discovered Olokun and a number of other objects the British officials ruling the territory stepped forward and declared that these things were sacred to the natives and could not be removed from the land of his discovery, as prescribed by the Government regulations.

The British Government," says Dr. Frobenius in his report, "has taken a most barbarous and unjustifiable attitude, inimical to the cause of learning and research.

I have found in West Africa traces of a highly intelligent and extremely ancient urban civilization. I have unearthed wonderfully worked quartz pillars, remains of granite figures, burnt clay portraits of classic beauty, and vessels and fragments of pottery splendidly overlaid with glass of various colors.

"Most of the relics are in pieces, but they are so beautiful that they can properly be compared with the works of classical antiquity.

"I have proved in the broadest sense that my Atlantis theory is correct."

The Temple of Poseidon was, according to Plato's narrative, the great centre of life in Atlantis. There the whole people gathered every fifth and sixth years alternately, and with sacrifices of bulls swore to observe the sacred inscriptions which were carved in the columns of the temple.

Dr. Frobenius is now endeavoring to trace the foundations of such a temple. It is true that Plato states that Atlantis was swallowed up by the ocean, but this does not preclude the possibility that the civilization of so great a nation was carried to other lands, and in any case we are not compelled to believe that Plato was right in every particular.

Curious Ancient Bronze Head on Its "Shrine," Guarded by a Native AND (BELOW) Another Mask from the "Lost Atlantis"

His Adored Wife, His Estimable Mother-in-Law, His Children, His Faithful Horse, His Cows, His Farm, Even His Name—ALL STRAYED

Omaha, Neb., May 1.

STRAYED—everything in this life that was prized by Farmer "Sam" Hutchings.

Look at the map of Southwestern Iowa and Eastern Nebraska—separated by the yellow, turgid Missouri River, where it is forever claiming fresh acreage from one bank or the other—and on the Iowa side, a few miles north of the spot where the river is crossed by ferry to Nebraska City, is, or was, located the scene of the extraordinary tragedy in Sam Hutchings's life.

For two seasons after Sam's arrival the river, for lack of heavy snows in the upper valley, was satisfied with a toll of only a few yards from Farmer Hutching's cornfields.

Alas! the very next Spring witnessed the beginning of the end. Down from the Bad Lands roared the brimming Missouri, and in ten awful days swallowed twenty of Sam's fattest acres.

"I warned ye, Sam. I told ye so," said the old inhabitants.

All in vain was it that Sam scoffed at the wiseacres and turned a cheerful face toward the future. Gloom settled thickly on the once happy family. Sam was no longer a revered patriarch. Under wifely reproaches, ably supplemented by his mother-in-law, he grew thin, nervous and apologetic.

Even his adored children turned against him, ignoring his requests, answering him impertinently. Before the crops were gathered his only son, a lad of seventeen, ran away from home to be a brakeman on freight trains down in Missouri. Sam seemed to crumple up like a fallen leaf.

Mrs. Hutchings was Sam's second wife, a handsome young woman, well bred and educated. That Winter she suddenly grew frivolous, frequently visiting friends in the nearest town, and becoming more and more discontented and disagreeable on the farm.

Soon after the high water of the following Spring had swept away fully half of Sam's remaining acres, his wife failed to return from one of her visits to town. A taunting letter, dated at Kansas City a week later, ordered Sam to get a divorce at once, as she had eloped with a wiser man—a clothing "drummer" from Chicago, who "knew enough to go in when it rained."

Only his mother-in-law's sympathy for him and her kindly attentions enabled Sam to survive this blow, which, before Fall was followed by another. His two daughters, one twenty and the other eighteen, left home to become chambermaids at the big hotel in town.

That Winter Sam's fine team of farm horses contracted the "epizootic" and died.

Toward the end of February the freshet prognostications became so alarming that Sam moved his mother-in-law and most of his household goods to an old shack back from the river on the rising land of a neighbor.

It was none too soon. That mighty, devouring current rolled down from the north and swept away the last vestige of Sam's farm—catching even his cows and pigs unawares and adding them to the river's spoil. Lucky old Dobbin alone remained to comfort the farmer's heart—for mother-in-law had now given up all hope.

In fact, the very day after this crushing blow faithful old Dobbin and mother-in-law disappeared together and were seen no more in those regions.

Farmer Sam, with bowed head and tottering steps, wandered to town and into the bank where he had a small deposit. It was his idea to draw it out and buy a railway ticket back to Indiana. He was so changed the bank people could not recognize him. And Sam could not remember his own name. Aphasia! All he could say was:

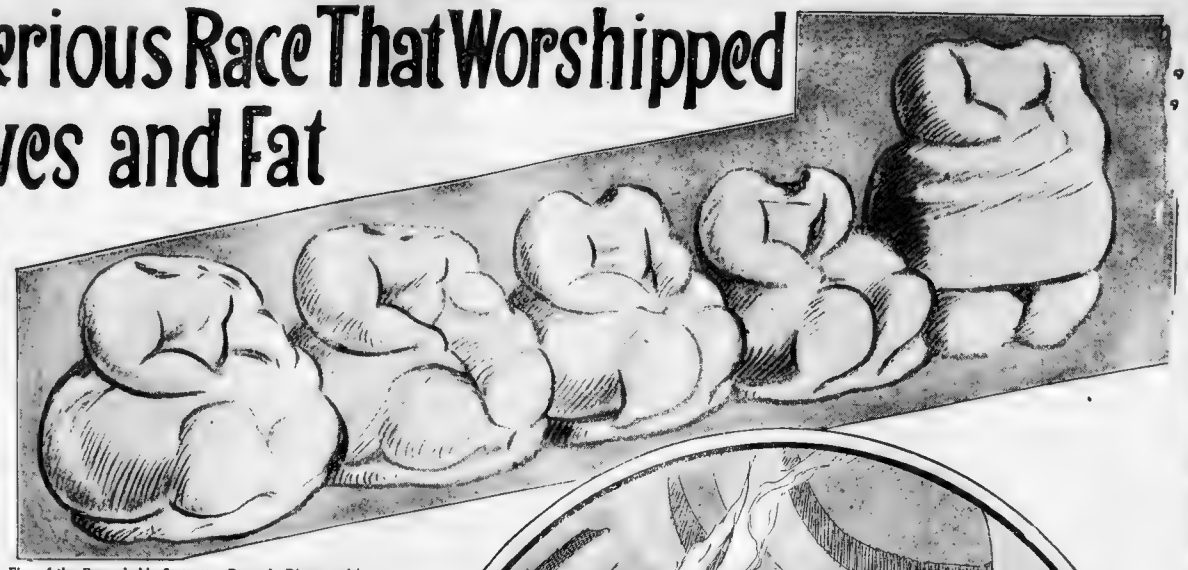
A Mysterious Race That Worshipped Curves and Fat

Exploration of a Strange Underground Temple in Malta, Where a Vanished Prehistoric People Performed Weird Rites to Obesity.



Five of the Remarkable Statuettes Recently Discovered in an Underground Temple at Malta. Just as the Most Noticeable Feature of These Idols Is Fat, So the Most Conspicuous Feature of the Temple in Which They Were Found Is Its Curves.

THERE is a current saying that "nobody loves a fat man." Whether this is true or not it is undoubtedly not a fact that nowadays nobody loves a fat woman, although the modern woman regards impending obesity as the greatest calamity that could befall her.

In view of this modern aspect, a recent find in the Mediterranean island of Malta is of more than passing interest. It indicates that there was a people once to whom obesity was godly—a people who worshipped fat and curves.

This discovery was made at Paula, a village about two and a half miles from the Porta Reale of Valetta, during the recent exploration of an underground temple, or Hypogæum, at that place.

The Hypogæum is about thirty feet below the surface. It is circular in form, and curves constitute the dominant feature of its architecture. The doorways are all circular and rounded niches are to be found throughout.

The subterranean temple at Paula was discovered several years ago, but it was not until recently when its recesses were more thoroughly explored that the nature of the people who built it and worshipped in it was partially cleared up. Even now it is called the "Mystery of Malta."

The credit for this additional information is due to Professor Zammit, the indefatigable curator of the Valetta Museum, who for the the past year or two has been spending the greater part of his leisure in the excavation and study of the Hypogæum.

After completing his survey of the general aspect of the temple, Professor Zammit recently undertook the more fruitful task of exploring various inner chambers, the floors of which were covered by accumulated debris to a depth varying from one to two feet. In this debris he found crumbling pieces of human bone and fragments of pottery.

Among the smaller examples of plastic art which have been found in the Hypogæum is a reclining figure in terra cotta, which the Professor dates back to between 300 and 200 B. C.

In addition to this curious figure, seven large ones, similarly formed, were found. One, a standing figure, larger than the rest, was adorned with curious stripes and bands around the middle of the body. Four were seated figures, apparently nude, while the remaining two were clothed in long garments.

All the figures were headless, although in two cases instead of a broken surface at the neck there are a worked depression and small holes, probably serving to fasten in a wobbling head. The workmanship is not very crude although the extremities are generally little more than formless stumps, with toes and digits only indicated in a few cases.

These hands and feet are always curiously small and attenuated and contrast strikingly in this respect with the extreme fatness of the limbs and of the other parts of the body.

Just as all of these figures are uniformly fat, so are the many chambers of the Hypogæum uniformly curved. The floors vary from twelve to fifteen feet in diameter, and the walls are often curved vertically as well as laterally.

It was formerly agreed among archeologists that all of the most ancient antiquities of Malta were of Phoenician origin, but that belief has been almost totally abandoned. Indeed, in his exhaustive study of the prehistoric remains of Malta, Professor Mayr shows that the construction of the Maltese sanctuaries is entirely at variance with Phoenician peculiarities.

That there are in Malta plenty of Phoenician tombs and other remains of Phoenician colonization is obvious enough, but the finds recently made are very different from the Phoenician type, which was more developed. Even had they been identical with earlier stages of Phoenician art, they would hardly have been introduced into Malta by colonists or traders at a later stage of development.

Recent research, moreover, indicates that these peculiar temples and idols were the product of early Western Mediterranean civilization, which Professor Mayr traces from Malta to the northwestern coasts of France, England and Ireland and as far north as the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

Whatever may have been the exact use to which the mysterious chambers of the Hypogæum with their strangely curved walls were put, Professor Zammit's recent discovery lends strength to the theory that Malta was the site of an individual civilization which persisted through long ages with striking tenacity and character and survived, in the shape of its underground temples and unique statuettes, to this

Calling in Queer Little Birds, Bugs and Bats to Eat the Famous Jersey Mosquitoes

Enormously Enlarged Photograph of the Mouth of the Mosquito, Showing the Formidable Apparatus with Which It Sucks Up the Blood of Its Victims.

NEW JERSEY'S annual war against mosquitoes is being pushed more vigorously this year than ever before.

Hitherto the health officials have confined their efforts largely to the destruction of the larvae and wigglers—the immature mosquitoes. The full-sized, able-bodied fellows have been allowed to pursue their nefarious work of spreading disease without serious hindrance. This year, however, the campaign will be broad enough to include skeeters of every size and degree.

The practise of spreading crude petroleum over the marshes, meadows and swamps in which the skeeter breeds will be continued, but in addition to this an effort will be made to increase the number of mosquito-eating birds which frequent the Jersey shores.

Of these birds there are no less than nine varieties, but in recent years they have been almost exterminated through the activity of the pot-hunter. The sandpiper, the phalarope, the killdeer and the plover are all well-known mosquito-killing shore birds, but in both Fall and Spring they are shot along the whole route of their migration north and south to such an extent that their numbers are being rapidly diminished, while the mosquito flourishes.

It is now planned to import these birds in large numbers into the State and to pass laws prohibiting their destruction.

Unfortunately, shore birds lay fewer eggs than any of the other species generally termed game birds. They deposit only three or four eggs and hatch only one brood yearly. In the more temperate climates small birds, in general, do not bring up more than one bird for every two eggs laid, but shore birds with sets of three or four eggs probably do not on the average rear more than two young for each breeding pair.

In addition to these birds, the Jersey authorities are thinking of importing other natural enemies of the mosquito.

It is well known that the common goldfish and silverfish destroy mosquito larvae and might prove very effective in the Jersey lakes. Top-minnows of several species have been introduced successfully in several localities and are great feeders upon insect larvae.

Certain species introduced from Texas into Hawaii worked wonders, and a small top-minnow known in the Barbados as "millions" has been carried with equal success to others of the British West India Islands. In Rio de Janeiro another top-minnow has been used by the public health service for placing in tanks and boxes where it was impossible to use petroleum.

There are many predatory aquatic insects that feed upon mosquito larvae, others that catch adults, while bats regard mosquitoes as their inveterate enemies.

At the present time an experiment is being carried on near San Antonio, Texas, in which a bat roost has been constructed with the dual purpose of gathering the bats to kill mosquitoes of that region and of collecting the bat guano. If the plan proves successful, it will be adopted in New Jersey.

There are several species of growing plants which are believed to possess properties calculated to keep mosquitoes away. Among these may be mentioned several species of eucalyptus, the castor-oil plant, the Chinabury tree and others. The evidence in regard to these plants, however, is contradictory. Claims that they are valuable are confined to people who have not made thoroughly scientific tests.

KATHE OLSHAUSEN SCHONBERGER is a German artist who has set Munich and other art centres by the ears. She is the Aesop of the pencil. It has been said that every man and woman has his or her prototype in some animal. There are the swine man and women, the horse men and women; every one knows the fox man, the wolf man, the spaniel or daschund man and woman, etc. Somewhere concealed under the human aspect is the animal, and there are some people with eyes keen enough to see this always. Fraulein Schonberger has eyes of this sort. Some of her caricatures are said to be so thinly disguised that many scandals have arisen through her portrayal of famous men and women in Germany in their bestial aspect. Here are four striking drawings by this Aesop of the pencil.

Mr. Ralph Herz Who Doesn't Want Miss Glaser to Divorce Him.

"HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH A HUSBAND"

Don't Think That Comedian Ralph Herz Isn't Just the One to Give Expert Advice Simply Because Fascinating Lulu Glaser Is Suing Him for Divorce

LULU GLASER has sued Ralph Herz for divorce. This action seems to make a finish of the English actor's persistent, almost pathetic, efforts to win back to his home celebrated American star of musical comedy.

After four years of troublous married life a love match when the Khalkhan was chief comedian in the American star's company—they separated. Mr. Herz recruited the separation and did his utmost to win back his wife.

He gave a "reunion" dinner for her at one of the chief hotels, the room being made bower-like with flowers. He bade all their friends to the dinner. When his wife objected that she had no suitable gown, he bought one for $400, and sent it to the theatre where she was playing.

Miss Glaser kept the gown, but did not appear at the dinner. The host shed tears of disappointment.

But he did not relax his efforts to re-win her. He was unremitting in his loving attentions, which she received coldly, at last rewarding them with a suit for divorce.

After these experiences Mr. Herz's views of married life in the theatrical profession, here given, ought to be valuable. He gives them, appropriately, in the form of advice to a hypothetical actor-comrade who has just laid himself liable at the "Little Church Around the Corner" to similar experiences.

By Ralph Herz

THERE'S great interest just now in trial marriages, but it's only a little juggling with terms. Marriage at its best is a trial.

I believe in it, nevertheless. Bless my soul, yes! Properly managed it is the most blessed state of man. But it must be managed. It must not be allowed to run away with one's common sense.

Yes, indeed. Write me down an ardent believer in marriage, and marriage on the stage a case here. I don't agree with the musty, fusty old theory that there is no chance for married happiness on the stage.

The great cry is that the absence of husband or wife works against happiness. But commercial travellers, for instance, are absent from home a large part of the year, longer than actors are, and there is no loud cry that commercial travellers should be barred from marriage.

I have a few warnings to utter that I would pour into the ear of any actor about to enter matrimony. We will suppose that I have, as you say in this country, "stood up" with my friend Jim Bake, in the most important ceremony of his life at the "Little Church Around the Corner." I should take Jim into a Sunday school room, or into the churchyard, while the bride's friends were spotting her gown with their tears and admonish him. I should say:

"Jim, old man, you've entered into a state from which no man can honorably withdraw. From which no man or woman should wish to withdraw. However it turns out, it's up to you to make the best of it.

"It's a permanent state, my boy. In England they've got the right idea of it. There they regard it as a substantial thing, one of the solid substances on which the national family security rests. There it is usual for a man to remain a woman's husband, a woman a man's wife, for the sake of the family. If they have no children it is the nearest members of the family that are to be considered, the father and mother of each, the brothers and sisters of both. The English man knows that disrupting the family lowers the moral standard of the individual, and that the nation stands or falls by its individuals. The nation in which divorce is common totters.

"No sir, lags at all seems better to me than divorce. For, given the greatest license of bachelors, no union has been desecrated by their acts."

But Jim, not worrying about the nation, and worrying a good deal about the bride from whom I am keeping him, grows restive, and I abandon generalities and come down to particulars.

"Keep her with you, Jim, at all hazards. Not so that you will give her no chance for jealousy, but so that there will be a chance for happiness if the question of travelling in separate companies, so that your salaries will be larger, comes up, don't consider it for a moment. Money should never enter for a moment into considerations of those who love.

Lulu Glaser-Herz, the Vivacious Little Actress Who Doesn't Approve of Her Husband's Theory How to Be Happy Though Married—Or What Is She Getting a Divorce For?

"When there are signs of the first quarrel, old man, alive to it often, at least half the time, and if you have a spark of generosity in you will humiliate her into giving in the other half. There's nothing worth fighting for, so don't fight.

"You may be thinking you're fighting for a principle, but it's a hundred to one it's selfishness. So give in. It's good practice for a husband.

"Don't lend yourself to a scene. Scenes are hideous things. If they don't kill love, they will cripple it so that it can't live.

"Don't be jealous. I have never been able to understand why, if people love, they should be jealous. Perfect love bars jealousy. Suspicion between those who love is an insult.

"Don't be petty nor illiberal with her, Jim. Allow her a certain amount of liberty, and she will grant you the same. Don't be tied to her apron strings, but keep tied to her heart strings.

"Aim to save a quarter to a half of your salary for a rainy day. But it depends upon the salary. If it is a hundred dollars a week they couldn't well save more than a quarter. But if he [illegible] save two hundred [illegible]

"Try to have a little home of your own, Jim, but don't keep it if it becomes a burden. Maybe your wife is too delicate to keep house, or maybe she is not adapted to it. Or, perhaps, keeping up the establishment is too expensive. Then give it up. Better be a hotel-living gypsy than let your wife grow petty and irritable with her housekeeping cares. And better be a hotel camper than a bankrupt.

"Don't care for show. Actors and actresses think they must live better and differently from other persons. Why? Twenty thousand dollars a year is a good income for an actor. But he cannot live like a millionaire on it. Why try?

In a ten-room house a man can live as comfortably as in one of fifty rooms. His distinguished friends will be as glad to visit him in it. And in the matter of food, the table is well provided every day. Why, when there are to be guests, should there be three times as much as on ordinary days? It can be for but one of two reasons. Either we are ashamed of what we have every day, or we wish to show off. Both are contemptible. Our friends come to see us, not the house, nor for the food. If they come for other reasons, they are not our friends, and we and the house and the table are better off without them.

Most women who remain on the stage after marriage are there from vanity. Or from greed, you suggest, Jim? No, I don't think so. It is vanity, for they spend all their money. If they were greedy they would keep it. No, it is vanity, and vanity is a thorn in the bed of matrimony. Vanity and its twin sister, professional jealousy, make hades of many professional marriages. But even if this should come to you, Jim, stay in Hades. Hades for two is better than a lonely heaven.

"I Don't Expect to be Believed BUT—"

By Wilson Mizner

Author of "The Only Law" and Co-Author of "The Deep Purple."

MATRIMONY is sufficient grounds for divorce.

Matrimony is a condition of mutual handicap.

Tenderness evinced at large is matrimonial cruelty.

The mere question, "Where have you been?" keeps the divorce courts congested.

Perhaps that man who insisted on washing the dishes and cooking the meals did so to avoid helping his wife move the piano up three flights of stairs.

The man who wrote "Is marriage a failure?" was hard to convince.

When Reno fails there is still Niagara Falls.

The average married man goes home with the same spirit with which he'd keep a date with the guillotine.

A censorship at the marriage license bureau would be more beneficial than a censorship of the drama.

The motto "God Bless Our Home" was a torture-wrung prayer.

Who was it who said, "Out of the home into the sunshine"?

A popular plaint is that married men stay out drinking with their friends. They ought to do anything with their friends or for their friends—they'll need them.

Distance may lend enchantment, but not credulity—don't use a phone.

A smiling bridegroom is actuated by the same spirit of braggadocio that makes a condemned man smilingly plant himself in the electric chair.

Nothing makes matrimony as difficult to endure as the laws against battery.

If I ever get married and you reprint this it won't be pleasant for you the day after.

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY

No. 124 - Bowling as a Beauty Exercise

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

BOWLING as a beautifier, is the topic of Mme. Cavalieri's lecture on beauty culture to-day.

Mme. Cavalieri approves the sport, especially when it is of the out-door variety. She describes the game and tells how it benefits the player

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

I AM glad to see among my Summer invitations requests to join amusement-seeking and health-seeking parties at games of bowls, especially of bowling on greens, this season. For bowls has the immense advantage of being a cheerful indoor sport in Winter and an invigorating outdoor sport in Summer.

The fascinating outdoor sport with which the lovely Mary Queen of Scots regaled herself, as much for her health and beauty's sake as for amusement, and in which Charles I., while a prisoner, engrossed himself to the exclusion of his sorrows, is becoming more popular and is what may be termed one of the most useful of the sports. James I. licensed it and recommended it "to be partaken of moderately" by his son, Prince Henry. So absorbing is the centuries-old game, that, a story is told that Admiral Drake, being warned that the Spanish Armada was approaching, insisted upon finishing his game of bowls before setting forth to meet the mighty enemy. Friends took me to a famous Revolutionary tavern in New York, on the lawn of which General Washington and his staff "put their eight years of battles in encagements at bowls.

But it is no mere man's sport. Never was woman more feminine than Mary Queen of Scots, and she was by her own words "devoted to bowls." So, also, were beautiful queens, and many famous beauties who were not queens, in history. If you are invited to bowl on any green be so take as willingly as you accepted the invitation to such a game a Winter, for it will be of twice as great value to you, for exercise out of doors always has double the value of gymnastics within enclosing walls and beneath a roof.

Bowls and singing are alike, in that every one can learn to play bowls, as every one can learn to sing. Though not every one can excel in either every one can derive enjoyment from their practise.

The game has the power of "taking one out of oneself" as effectually as do the "forty winks" in which we "lose ourselves." The player forgets everything except the ball, the floor or the green grass which is the scene of action, and the "alleys." Any game which prevents the mind treading consciously or unconsciously its worn paths, lifts the man or woman out of daily thought environment, is a public benefit, and bowls belong in this class.

The principle is easily mastered. Expertness depends upon practise and the most enthusiastic players are those oldest in their experience of it.

The most important principle is that the player give the ball a long swing backward, behind him, before delivery. This is an excellent developing exercise for the chest, increasing the lung expansion and making the muscles of the forearm firm.

Bowling is excellent practise for the eyes. While the course of the ball is not always straight, the eye must be kept on the pins, and success depends largely upon sure-sightedness.

It develops, as does no other sport, the always desirable "good right arm." That member becomes as reliable and as necessary as the pendulum of a clock. The elbow joint is trained to become absolutely straight. The arm hangs from the shoulder as though it possessed but one joint and that the one on the shoulder.

Bowling teaches the body the art, almost lost to persons who spend much time in the sedentary work of the shops, the schoolrooms or offices, of stooping. The ball must be lowered to the alley by bending the body far forward from the hips.

It teaches swift adjustment and fine control of the body. Expert bowlers take two to four short, quick steps before delivering a ball.

The first position consists in steadying the ball with both hands raised and measuring the distance to run with the eye. Place the left foot well forward. Turn the body enough to permit the right arm to swing quite free of the body.

Then swing the ball downward and back with a long sweep of the arm. Take one step forward and bend the body forward as a balance to the weight of the ball. Swing the arm backward so that the ball approaches the shoulder of the player. This is the important second position. The third position is that in which the ball is started. The body darts forward with the two to four steps I have described and that adds to the force of the ball's flight. The arm flashes powerfully forward, the elbow remaining straight. The ball is started on its way by a last lunge or thrust with all its force, of the body, the body bending so that the ball just grazes the alley as it starts on its flight. Do not drop the ball a few inches to the alley, and be sure when you drop it you do so with an arm, the elbow of which is perfectly straight. Either of these is an error that would rob the ball of its force or that would make its course a crooked one. The fourth position, that of following the ball, has been described as "the wooer's," so engrossingly attentive is the player to his task of following the ball he has sent. One of the most famous English bowlers is watched by crowds with joyous hilarity because he always runs up the green following the ball and coaxing it as though it were an obstinate maiden. Sometimes he even leaps ahead of it, twisting his body into strange contortions, and eyeing the ball as though he were trying to hypnotize it into the course he had intended it should take.

Don't fall into such mannerisms. Neither fall into the even worse habit of self-consciousness. Play naturally and you will be rewarded by hardened muscles, reduced flesh, a freer grace of movement, a clearer complexion and richer color, and the high spirits that give a fine poise to the head and light to the eye.

"The ball is started on its way by a last lunge, with all its force, of the body."

"Swing the ball downward and back with a long sweep of the arm."

"The first position consists in steadying the ball, with both hands raised, and measuring the distance it has to run with the eye."

"Sponging" Bachelors Not Wanted

By a Discouraged Hostess.

I'M sick of bachelor-men—they are no better than "sponges."

The trouble is, one cannot give a party without them. A certain number of swallow-tails" are as necessary to the success of a dance or a dinner as are the music at one and the food at the other. That is why they score and where lies the strength of their position.

If it were not for this fact there are not more than three or four men for whom I really care who would ever get even a cup of tea in my house.

The others—well, they are invited simply for appearance sake. Many of them are stupid; most of them valu, and all desperately keen upon chaperoning themselves from my own and other people's daughters, who in all probability have absolutely no designs upon their bachelorhood.

The average young man adds little to the general amusement of the room he enters. He has all the air of not wanting to be there, and his hostess regards him merely as a necessary bit of the furnishing of her room. Unless she be blind and deaf, he gives away to her whenever he comes the fact that he considers his presence there quite sufficient return for her hospitality.

He talks of the plays to which he can get passes, but never suggests taking her or one of the girls. He tells her the name of the last new song, or says: "Have you seen so-and-so in this month's so-and-so?" but does not offer to get her the music or the magazine.

He eats lunch after lunch at her house, and does not even bring her a bunch of violets in return. He doesn't want to marry one of her daughters, won't even bother to get a really important introduction for one of her sons and resents being occasionally asked at the last moment as a "fill-up."

So what manner of man is he? As I said before, he is simply furniture. Just as a suite is not perfect without a certain number of chairs, a social gathering is incomplete without a sprinkling of black coats.

I know a lady whose methods of dealing with such persons are somewhat drastic. I couldn't do such things myself, but I am not sorry that there is someone who can.

When she has lavished endless hospitality upon a young man, and realizes that, though he has the means he has not the intention of making any return, she invites him to a little dinner at the hotel, say, with herself and a couple of daughters.

When, after dinner, the last liqueur has been disposed of in the lounge the lady suddenly gives a little scream of amazement at the lateness of the hour, and followed by her girls she makes a dash for the cloak room, leaving the young man to pay! Or else she commissions him to buy the flowers for her party, or a box for the children at the pantomime, and then pretends to be enormously surprised and delighted at his "charming present."

"Does he ever speak to you again?" I asked, when she had explained her tactics to me.

"Oh, yes! I believe he thinks after the more of me forever after. He acknowledges to himself the fact that I am only insisting upon my rights, and he respects me for my attitude." I once heard a young man say to another: "I have to give old Skinflint a dinner now and again or he doesn't ask me to his place to shoot. But the Giveaills are not the 'cutlet-for-cutlet' sort, so I don't bother to entertain them." And that, I believe, is the point of view of the average bachelor man."

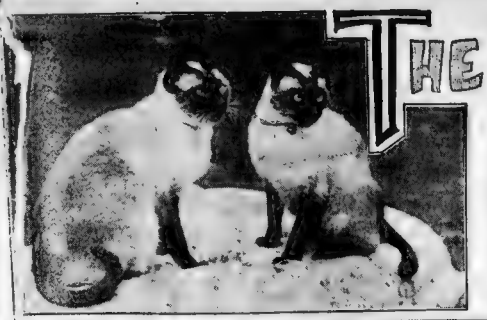
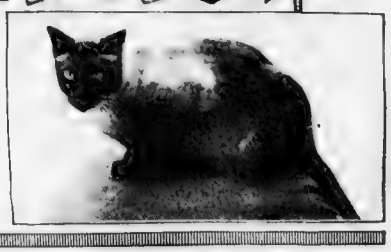
THE CRAZE FOR SIAMESE CATS





A Beautiful Specimen on the Back of Its Master, Francois de Croisset, Author of "Arsene Lupin."

How the Ladies of Paris and London Have Adopted the Rare Felines in Place of Lap-dogs

Two of the Duchess of Roxburgh's Collection of Siamese Beauties.

JUST at present the Siamese cat is the pet that holds the centre of the stage.

The fad for these cats has become a sort of craze in Paris and London, and nearly every person of note owns one. Even those people who have always hated cats have been won over by pussy from Siam, for she is more like a dog than a cat, and has none of the nasty characteristics that we have learned to call "catty."

One can take a Siamese cat on one's walks and she will not become panicky at the least noise or strangers, but will trot along beside her master just like a dog. These cats are marvelously intelligent and respond to words that other cats pay no heed to.

One of the chief reasons for the fad for these cats is that they are a distinct novelty, for until about eighteen years ago none was allowed to leave Siam, and only royal people were permitted to own them there.

But a pair of these were presented to Lady Marcus Beresford about twenty years ago by one of the royal princes of Siam, and she started a cattery at her English home. Others took up breeding from her cats and kittens and now by paying a pretty high price for them any one may own a Siamese cat.

They are still very, very rare in America, however, only ten being known to exist here, but now it is the fashion abroad to own them we shall soon find them the rage here. The Duchess of Roxburghe has a number of them; also the Countess of Suffolk.

Lady Suffolk's cats—she now has more than twenty of them—are all of a dull white, with black ears, noses, tails and paws. The black does not end abruptly where it joins the white, but is gradually blended. They have clear yellow-green eyes and white whiskers, and present a most striking appearance. Their hair is short, like that of an ordinary house cat, and in that respect they differ from most of the other Asiatic varieties with which Americans are more or less familiar.

In Siam it is a grave crime to kill one of these cats, and they roam at will with impunity. They are held in high esteem in the royal palaces, and for that reason are often referred to as the royal sacred cats of Siam.

It is said that no one can be long associated with these peculiar animals without falling under the spell of their strange fascination.

How far the Siamese theory of the transmutation of the soul through these cats is to be upheld may be a matter of conjecture, but Lady Suffolk's experience with them has convinced her that there is certainly something about them which indicates strong individual personalities, and she is keeping them under close observation in the hope of making some interesting discovery along this line.

It is certain that the students had a great deal more respect for cats than they are accorded nowadays.

The dwellers along the Nile always felt a superstitious reverence for "pretty pussy," and it is said that when one died a natural death in any house, the inmates promptly shaved their eyebrows as a token of their grief.

In case of a fire the Egyptians' first concern was to save the cat. Perhaps the best tribute which the Egyptians ever paid to their cats was to have their mummified remains sent to the faculty of the period were established especially as mummified. It is said that they were used to hunt and carry waterfowl, and many Egyptian tombs represent the hunting scene showing the cat bringing into the water the fish it has retrieved and carry the prize in its jaws. Whether these cats were of a different species to those of the present time, seems to be a matter of considerable doubt among the naturalists, but the chances are that puss has changed much more than most animals since then.

The whole fashionable world of Paris has become mad over the cats, and every smart actress and society lion has one, not to mention playwright and manager. Pat Campbell, in fact, has a Siamese cat, and it is said the Siamese cat is a sort of fetish. At least any price is paid for them. Dainty dames coo and wheedle about with her on their walks in perambulator as if it was a baby and, of course, attracts an immense amount of attention as she desires.

Francois de Croisset, the author of "Arsene Lupin," has one. Here is a photo of the cat on his master's back.

Sasha Gintzy has two and has fun of them all manner of droll tricks that amuse his friends for a whole evening. Lantelme has four Siamese cats, all tied in love bows and the Countess Desdya has a single specimen of beauty, given her by the French ambassador to Siam. It was sent in a box.

These cats are a fine blue, have a creamy white coat of soft hair, with ears, nose, paws and tail black, looking as if smoky. I'm with the finger where it joins the white fur. Their eyes are a golden yellow.

Lady Whitecombe and Her Siamese Pet, Which She Takes with Her on All Her Walks.

Why Widows Are More Fascinating Than Single Girls

AN instinctive dislike and dread of the young and attractive widow who crosses her path is traditional in the unmarried girl, in her she recognizes a rival whose battery of charms is perfect. She fears her snares; she mistrusts her machinations. Deeming her a trifler, she cannot bear to trust her sweetheart out of her sight when fluttering in the distance she perceives the white flag of a widow's bonnet strings.

Are such rivals really superlatively dangerous? In many instances they are fascinating neither naturally nor intentionally. Their hearts are buried in their husbands' graves. Yet in their very pathos they are hedged round with attractions. Men who are tender and kind cannot bear to witness a woman's sorrow without making a brave attempt to offer her consolation.

But unmarried girls ought to know better than to ruffle up like angry birds and accuse such sad little women of guile. They should place greater faith in their own capabilities, and cultivate them more assiduously, instead of wasting time upon railing against the power to please which others possess. Quite certain it is that, given equal attractions, ninety nine men out of a hundred would rather propose to a woman who has never been married before than to a widow.

As a rule, the girl who girds against the conquests her rival scores, apparently with such exquisite ease, is not a very apt analyst. If she were, she would soon succeed in discovering those charms which make the widow fascinating, and, having done so, would add them to her own list of attractions. She would realize the mistakes an inexperienced girl so often makes, and would feel faith in the more seasoned syren's management of men, arguing—and with perfect justice—that, having been educated to please one, she ought to know how to please many.

The attractive widow, she would perceive, is almost invariably bright in manner, not at all shy, and of the most seraphic temper. Nothing ruffles her serenity; she sees humor in the situation even when the rain pours and she has no umbrella and her best dress on. Her piquancy is peculiarly delicious, and of the most infectious quality; gloom finds no part in her vicinity; and the man who buries in her smiles and listens to her rippling laughter, is rescued from the blues and all other depressing ills of the kind as if by magic.

A young widow, however lovely, does not rely solely upon her looks to produce an impression. When she wants to please one of the opposite sex she is always good company. She has read the latest novel, seen the newest play, heard the most fashionable gossip, and upon all subjects practise intelligently and entertainingly. This the average girl dare not do. To begin with, she is far too shy to "show off," as she terms it, her knowledge of current literature; somewhere she has heard or read that men are bored by "blue-stockings," and she is incapable of discriminating between a heavy, erudite dissertation upon a subject and a light, butterfly-like mention of what is going on in the world of books.

To read a scientific work merely in order to be able to take an intelligent interest in the subject that is her sweetheart's hobby would be, to her, far too great a task to be endured, and yet she will go green with jealousy when his eyes brighten and his voice swells with enthusiasm while discussing its merits with that artful widow.

The widow of mature age who intends to marry again sets her cap at the man she means to win with the very nicest diplomacy, and rather on a different system from the one the youthful and beautiful one adopts. She flatters him by asking his advice about her children's education, if she have any, and he is a learned person with "views" upon the subject. Should he consider himself a smart man of affairs, she brings her monetary troubles to him, especially asking him to recommend her sound investments, or to tell her how to set about the purchase of a little business for herself.

What is a lonely woman to do without work when time hangs so heavily on her hands, she asks pathetically—so pathetically, indeed that he who can harden his heart against the most rational solution of the difficulty is unworthy the name of lord of creation.

Five million corns every year—25 every minute—are being removed by Blue-jay. Nobody who knows them uses anything else.

A Blue-jay plaster ends the pain instantly. Then the bit of B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In two days you lift it out. No Pain, no soreness, no inconvenience. The plaster is applied in a moment. It is so snug and so comfortable that you simply forget it. One is foolish indeed to suffer from corns when there is such an easy way to get rid of them

See the Picture

A is the harmless red B & B wax which loosens the corn

B is soft felt to protect the corn and keep the wax from spreading.

C is the comfortable narrow band which goes around the toe.

SUNDAY-AMERICAN-EXAMINER-PATTERNS

SPECIAL BARGAIN DAY-ANY TWO PATTERNS FOR TEN CENTS

NO. 8761.

The Newest in Work Aprons.

THIS apron is just what the busy housewife needs in doing the work about the house. It is not only a protection to the dress, but attractive as well.

The front is in princess style, while the fulness in the back is held in place by a belt.

Percale, gingham and linen are all used in the making.

The pattern is cut in three sizes—small, medium and large. The medium size requires 3 5-8 yards of 36-inch material.

NO. 8949.

GIRL'S DRESS, WITH LONG OR SHORT SLEEVE.

STRIPED percale in blue and white was used for this model. The pointed collar makes a neat neck finish. The Gibson plaits give breadth to the shoulders, and the pocket adds a neat touch to the front.

The pattern is cut in five sizes—6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 4 1-8 yards of 44-inch material for the 14-year size.

NO. 8954.—A POPULAR AND PLEASING BLOUSE MODEL.

FOR comfort and coolness this model is most desirable. The low neck opening and short sleeve, the simple, graceful lines and finish are all that the home dressmaker could wish for in a style that is easy to develop and a pleasure to wear. For madras, lawn, linen, dimity, chambray, percale, linen, silk or flannel the design is equally appropriate.

The pattern is cut in seven sizes—32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 2 3-4 yards of 36-inch material for the 36-inch size.

NO. 8953.—A DELIGHTFUL, SEASONABLE FROCK.

VERY effective for linen, chambray, gingham, percale, cashmere, pongee or other materials now in vogue. The model may be developed as a one-piece dress or with separate waist and skirt. It is to be worn with or without a guimpe or tucker. The waist and skirt have an inserted panel at front and back, which could be prettily braided or embroidered.

The pattern is cut in five sizes—14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 years. It requires 4 1-4 yards of 36-inch material for the 14-year size.

NO. 8950.—GIRL'S DRESS, WITH PEASANT YOKE AND WITH OR WITHOUT TUCKER.

BLUE linen, with pipings of tan and buttons to match, was used for this design. The waist portions are plaited under the peasant yoke, that has cap sleeves. The skirt is plaited. A bishop sleeve finishes the tucker. Any of this season's dress goods will develop this model effectively.

The pattern is cut in four sizes—8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 2 1-2 yards of 44-inch material for the dress, with 1 1-8 yards of 36-inch material for the tucker, for the 10-year size.

NO. 8968.—LADY'S SURPLICE CORSET COVER, WITH THREE-GORE SKIRT, WITH RUFFLE.

FOR all lingerie fabrics this model will be found most desirable. The fronts of the cover are crossed in surplice style, and there is no fulness above the bust. The skirt is cut on fitted lines, and is lengthened by a ruffle that may be of lace or embroidery.

The pattern is cut in three sizes—small, medium and large. It requires 3 yards of 36 or 40 inch material for the medium size.

NO. 8960.—LADY'S DRESSING SACQUE.

SIDE closings are as effective in garments of this kind as in shirt waists and gowns. This cool looking model is suitable for lawn, dimity, challie, crossbar muslin, crepe or silk. As here shown white silk, with trimming of blue and white dotted silk, was used.

The pattern is cut in three sizes—small, medium and large. It requires 3 3-4 yards of 27-inch material for the medium size.

To obtain any two of these patterns fill out the accompanying coupon and mail with 10 cents in silver or stamps to

Foxy Grandpa and The Boys

LITTLE BROTHER

The Boys Planned a Dusty Surprise for Little Brother, but Got a Wet Surprise Themselves, for Foxy Grandpa Overheard Their Little Plans.

1. BOYS—Let's have some fun with Little Brother out of these old empty barrels.

2. BOYS—Now for a little soot on the ashes, and then for a grand race and a dusty joke on baby.

3. BOYS—Come, baby, let's see who can jump into a barrel first. We will give you a start and let you have the little barrel.

4. BOYS—Goodness! Why, Little Brother is beating. How surprised Gran'pa will be when we tell him!

5. GRANDPA—Well, it was certainly lucky for baby that I changed the boys' arrangements.

6. GRANDPA—Hello, boys! What funny new game are you teaching Little Brother? Now, don't be rough with the little fellow!
